I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements. The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compent sated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effec- of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respectable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, having its Sesty suit of nature soon to be warmed inanimation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green, So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next hing is to find a good place to fit out at a

REASONABLE PRICE,

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States:

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances,

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS
OR AS SOME SAY,
"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doinga

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

REMOVAL.

DR. J. A. ROBINSON,

SURGEON DENTIST,

SALEM,

WOULD respectfully give notice that he has removed from his old stand, opposite the City Hall, to No. 20 Washington street, recently occupied by A. E. Phillips, where he is ready to perform all operation, in Dentistry, in a most thorough and workmanlike manner.

His experience and success in inserting whole sets either by atmospheric pressure or springs, enables him to furnish them at rates which cannot fail to suit those in want of an article of superior quality.

His method of inserting Teeth, both singly and on plate, with or without Gums, has been found to be satisfactory and successful as combining beauty of finish and adaptation, with all the requisites of mastication and articulation.

Particular attention paid to filling Teeth so as to render them serviceable for many years, and also to the regulation of Children's Teeth.

N. B. For sale as above, a first rate article of TOOTH POWDER. 6m mch 15

LORRAINE'S PILLS.

All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by things that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them finds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yours respectfully,

J. E. F. MARSH.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 1843

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills, we have sold all we had last. They have given very good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,

E. MASON.

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 1844

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtue, of Lorraine's Pills, I had no faith whatever, but I took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirefy left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,

W. M. HALSTAL

Sir: I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

New England Office and General Depot, No 10 Brattle Square, Boston.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent—all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

Respecifully, your ob't serv't,

JAMES COLSON, Esq.

Bath, Maine, July 16th, 1844,

A severe pain, in both sides cured!!

LOWELL, Mass., April 20th 1944.

Sir,—For the last few months I have been afflicted with a severe pain in both sides, at times so hard that I could scarcely get my breath. * * * * It is a pleasure to feel well,—but a much greater one to say that I was cured immediately upon taking one dose of Dr. LORRAINE'S PILLS. J. BROOKS.

A hacking cough constantly annoyed me!

BOSTON, Mass., June 1st; 1844

Sir,—In February last, I took a sudden cold, after which a hacking cough constantly annoyed me, and this, combined with my other maladies, rendered me truly miserable, as everybody told me that I was in a consumption. Since, I have taken LORRAINE'S PILLS, and now every body tells me that I am well;—I feel as well as ever I did. J. E. S. McKEY.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

NEW ENGLAND TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads.—Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

May 31 JAMES FREDERICK FOSTER.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for peopleo f all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetab les from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, that of pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with ful directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamatiou of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

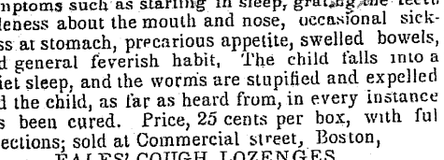
FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street, Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.



The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

POETRY.

PERIODS: WREATHS,

Weave thee a wreath of woodbine, Child!
'Twill suit thy infant brow;
It runs up free in the woodlands wild,
As tender and frail as thou.

He bound his brow with a woodbine wreath,
And smiled his playful eye,
And he lightly skipped o'er the blossomed heath,
In his young heart's extasy.

I saw him not till his manly brow
Was clouded with thought and care,
And the smile of youth, and its beauty, now
No longer wantoned there.

Go, twine thee a crown of the ivy tree,
And gladden thy loaded breast:
Bright days may yet shine out for thee,
And thy bosom again know rest.

Long years rolled on; and I saw again
His form in hoary age;
His forehead was deeply furrowed then,
In life's last feeble stage.

O be thy crown, old Man! I said,
Of the yew and the cypress made,
A garland meet for thy silvered head
Ere it low in the tomb be laid.

And such is Life, and such is Man
In his fleeting course below;
His little day that in joy began,
Must proceed and end in woe:

But another day shall weave for him
A garland that will not die,
And his cup of bliss shall o'erflow its brim,—
He shall live eternally.

THE MUSQUITO SERENADE.

In a summmer's night I take my flight
To where the maidens repose,
And while they're slumbering sweet and sound,
I bites them on the nose.
The [illegible] that tints their cheeks,
To me is precious dear,
For 'tis my delight to buzz and bite,
In the season of the year.

When I get my fill, I wipe my bill,
And sound my tiny horn,
And off I fly to the mountain high,
Ere breaks the golden morn.
But at eve I sally forth again,
To tickle the sleeper's ear,
For 'tis my delight to buzz and bite,
At the season of the year.

On the chamber wall about I crawl,
Till the landlord goes to bed;
Then my bugle I blow and down I go,
To light upon his head.
O, I love to see the fellow slap,
And I laugh to hear him swear,
For 'tis my delight to buzz and bite
At the season of the year.

SELECTED TALES.

FROM THE KNICKERBOCKER.

A NIGHT ADVENTURE IN CUBA.

BY NED BUNTLINE.

"Dulce, will you go to the masquerade ball to night?" said I to my lesser half, on a bright evening during the gayest part of the "carnival season."

"No my amor," answered she; "I am ill this evening; don't go out to-night, but stay by my side, and let your cheering presence save a doctor's fee."

"Madame, you know that I had made up my mind to go out in my new cabellero's dress; you're not very ill; and I shall be dull company for you if disappointment holds a berth in my mind. You had better consent to my going—I will return early."

"Do as you please, Sir," she responded pouttingly; "but if you neglect me thus in the first year of our marriage, how shall I be treated when Time's shadow shall darken my brow and dim the light of my eyes; when my spirits shall droop and my beauty fade before the wintry forests of age!"

To shorten my yarn, reader, I rigged myself and went to the ball, my heart beating a "conscience tatoo" against its casing all the way—for well I marked the soft reproach which my wife's full dark eye spoke when I left her side.

Having arrived at the ball-room, I mingled with the gay maskers, listened to the music, and in the sparkling wine glass sought for excitement—yet that perpetual drum-stick of conscience kept thumping against the parchment head of reflection, and I could not feel happy. Dressed as attractively as possible, I sought and danced with the fairest maidens in the throng; yet still, Thought, that nettle in life's garden—kept Joy in a distant offing, and Pleasure far in my wake.

I was about to give up the chase for enjoyment and had dutifully made up my mind to return home and moor myself alongside of my wife, when a fair hand was laid gently upon my arm and a tremulous musical voice asked me in a whisper to retire a little from the crowd. The hand was delicate, and seemed smaller even than my wife's—and the taper fingers were encircled by rings of rare value, such as could only be worn by the rich and the titled. The lady was closely veiled in black, yet I caught one glimpse of eye-light through the thick crape. In the blackness of a night-storm I have seen the clouds open for a moment and permit a star to glance with supernatual brightness down on the ocean; and even so fell that glance on me. The voice was one of those which, when it falls upon the ear, vibrates along every nerve until it reaches the heart-strings, where it re-echoes, till Memory catches the tune, and too truly for it ever to pass from her grasp.

I followed the stranger's invitation; and as I gazed on the fairy form before me, I forgot my little invalid at home. The "mask" was but little if any larger than my wife; yet there was a fullness and elegance of figure; a grace and voluptuousness of motion in the former, which I had never observed in the latter. My wife had beautiful, soft, glossy curls of jet, but they never could compare with the black tresses of twining silk, which hung nearly to the feet of my strange charmer. When we got clear of the throng, she again spoke.

"Are you a gentleman?—one in whom a lady may in all honor depend?"

I answered that to the best of my kuowledge and belief I was and tho't I might be depended upon.

"Would you risk your own life, or destroy that of another, for a lady, if her honor required, and her love would reward the act?"

"For one so fair, so angelic as yourself, I would risk more than life."

A shudder seemed to pass through the form, her little feet stamped the tesselated floor impatiently; her fingers were clasped together until they were bloodless, as she continued.

"Have you ever loved?"

"I may have felt a school-boy's passion," repied I, with assumed indifference.

"Then you are not married?"

"I have been," was the reply. Even so deceitful is man; even so is woman often lost; for while he pours forth the flattering tale, she listens; listening she loves—loving she is lost.

Again she showed marks of impatience and excitement, as if some great trouble rested on her mind. This I pressed her to reveal to me, offering every aid in my power to defend her or even to avenge past wrong. I besought her to have confidence in affection, new-fledged though it was, and to test its strength even as she might direct. She faltered, hesitated for a moment, and then requested me to await her return, and hastily left the ball-room.

"Now" thought I, "here is a scrape for a sober married man to get into! Perhaps she may be some beautiful siren, who knowing my weakness where the fair sex is concerned, has laid a trap to inveigle and rob, perhaps murder me! Shall I await her return? or shall I fly the danger? But I am armed—why should I fear?" I began to think of my poor injured wife, and these thoughts coupled with my fear of betrayal—by the aid of a little more solicitude would have conquered me, and sent me home: but at this critical moment, the mask' returned bearing in her hands a heavy black veil. She beckoned me to follow her into a neighboring street, where, in a moment, we stood beside a close curtained volante into which she sprang, I following her. She immediately enveloped my head in the veil which she had brought, cautioning me on my life not to attempt to remove it unless at her request.

The carriage started off with speed, indeed, the driver seemed to be urging his horses to a rapid gallop. The road was long, for even at this speed we must have ridden two hours, some of the time over rough rocky roads, then along smoother ways, when at last the panting animals were brought to a stand.

Immediately thereafter, I heard a creaking noise, as if a port-cullis were suddenly raised, or some old gate swung back on its uncoiled hinges.

'Speak not a word, whatever you may hear—attempt not to raise the veil, if your life and mine may be the forfeit!' whispered my fair suiter; and while she spoke I felt she trembled from head to foot. Her hand was as cold as ice, and her impetuous voice stifled and husky. Before we advanced from the carriage, she made me vow, by all the saints in heaven, never to reveal what I might do or see in that night's adventure.

She then led me cautiously on, apparently through a large garden, for the cool night breeze bore the perfume of orange, citron, pink, lemon and spice blossoms to my cheek. We soon arrived at another door, which creaked rustily as it opened before us; and then our way seemed up a winding stone stair-case, through a passage so still, so solemnly silent, that it even echoed the light footfall of my companion, while my own heavy tread rang like groans in a cavern, through the still, cold, damp air.

Until now, the lady had not, spoken since we stepped from the volante, but as we arrived at the stairs and passed into a warmer atmosphere, she whispered that the hour to test my courage and love had arrived. She stepped across a soft carpet and seated me on a yielding cushion. I could see nothing through the thick veil which she had thrown over my face, yet a kind of blueishness in the darkness before me couvinced me that I was in a lighted room. No sound could I hear, save the suppressed breathing of my companion and the beating of my own heart. After remaining for a moment on the ottoman which shook from her nervousness, she again addressed me.

'You are armed with pistol and dagger?

"I am," said I, inwardly praying that I might have no occasion to use either of them.

"You will please to give me those weapons," said she.

"Ha!" thought I: "I am betrayed, and she asks my weapons of defence, that I may be made an easier prey." "Let me ask, said I, the reasons for this strange request?"

"A true lover never asks for reasons from one in whom he confides," answered the 'mask;' adding, "The business I have in hand for you has need of courage, calmness and prudence, but your weapons could avail you nothing. They will not be required." She shuddered as she spoke, adding quickly, 'Such as they, have already done too much!'

She paused a moment, and seemed to be schooling herself to some dreadful task. Again she addressed me,—

I have a tale to tell you, Sir; no; not a tale, but some questions to ask. Had you an only sister, young, fair, innocent, and ignorant of the world's wickedness, and thus unprepared to cope with vile art and sinfulness; and should she meet with one who was in appearance all full of nobleness, purity, generosity and in her own full-heartedness, should she love him as only woman in nature's simplicity can love: and should, taking foul advantage of her affection for him, work her ruin, and having succeeded, then scornfully leave her without reparation, an outcast from even his bosom; a dark thing upon the world; unwilling to live, unprepared to die; and should she, in the hour when he spurned a dishonored thing from his feet—even when she was pleading for the love and protection of one who with hellish art had wrought her ruin—should she, in that dire moment of crowded miseries, strike a poinard to his heart——?'

'She would do her duty!' cried I, excited almost to madness by the painful picture.

'Would you aid her in removing all proof of the crime?' continued the 'mask;' would you assist that poor girl to place beneath the dark earth all that was earthly of her defiler?'

'I would! If thou art she, lead on! I am ready; ay, ready to do more! Would that my hand, instead of thine, had sent the recreant soul to its hissing home! I love thee now better than before. True, thou hast been dishonored, but thou art avenged!'

'Be not too hasty, Sir,' said she 'let me sketch you one other picture before I call upon you for action. Again I will suppose you have an only sister. I will suppose her, with your full knowledge and consent, to have given her affection and her hand to one whom you believe to be noble, manly, and in every way calculated to make her know the bliss of existence. She loves him, even over the bounds of this world's adoration; watches for his smile, as the flower beaten down by the rain waits for the sunshine; sighs and droops when the clouds of sorrow cast their shadows over him; joys when his hopes brighten; ministers to his every comfort, and seems a being as closely bound to him as light in the diamond. Suppose that he to whom you have entrusted her, the innermost heart jewel of yourself, the bright corner of your domestic fire-side; imagine that he should grow? cold and unmindful of her peace; that he smiles should fall upon him cold as a torch-light on a funeral pall; that her voice should no longer be music to his ear, that he should seek for other smiles, and give to other ears the words which were alone her due; when you saw her drooping, fading, dying beneath the shadow of his neglect, what would you do?'

'Slay him! by the hand which made! I would slay him as a dog that had bitten, or a serpent which had stung me!'

Even as I spoke, I thought of my own deserted wife, and Conscience 'took a pull at the halliards' of my heart, and rung it to the very core, I felt as tho' I could have given a world, had it been mine to give, if I could be placed along-side the couch of my lonely wife; and I vowed in my soul never to grieve her again should I return unharmed from the dreadful scene of that night.

'Lady,' said I, 'if your first tale be, as I feel it is, true—if you have slain him who wrought your ruin, and have chosen me to aid you in your dreadful task, I pray you hasten the deed. Let there be no delay.'

'Then follow me you need not follow far,' said she.

She led me on a few steps, into what I supposed to be another room; here she bade me pause, and calm myself. I must acknowledge that I felt greatly agitated, but mustering all my self possession and presence of mind, I prepared to cast aside the veil at her bidding, and determined not to shrink from the horrible duty which lay before me. She lifted the veil from my head.—A blaze of light forced me to close my eyes; and then I dared not open them. Imagination painted a scene before me which I feared to gaze upon. At last shame unclosed my eyelids; and I gazed around. * * * *

Surprise almost stunned me.

It could not be!—YES IT WAS! I stood within my own bed-room. The stranger raised her mask. My wife's large black eyes looked sorrowfully out upon me; she cast the long tresses of glossy hair from her head, and, then appeared her own soft curling ringlets playing about her neck. She had fallen upon this plan to punish me for seeking pleasure at a time when she, by reason of sickness and suffering could not enjoy it with me.—She had, indeed, taught me a lesson of conjugal fidelity.

My own volante had driven me at full speed over half the city! I had been led through a back gate, and had traversed a part of my house which I had never before entered—and all through the contrivance of my witch of a wife. Borrowed jewels had disguised her hands—she spoke in an altered voice beneath her mask, and I, like most men, ever ready to be pleased with a new object, had actually fallen in love with my own wife!

What a fix for a married man to be in!

MISCELLANY.

INTELLECTUAL RUIN.

To meditate amongst decay, and stand
A ruin amidst ruins. Byron.

What is more melancholy than to behold a mind in ruins;—God's noblest work dishonored and trodden in the dust—His most precious endowments neglected, the riches of GENIUS and intellect scattered to the winds, or perverted to uses that render them a curse rather than a blessing to mankind! Cast thine eyes backward along the vista of years gone-by, and enumerate, if thou canst, the multitudes who have fallen, even as the brute falleth, and whose memory, instead of being enshrined in the hearts of millions, finds only here and there a solitary and uncertain resting-place in the bosom of some friend. Look at BURNS and BYRON!—those bright intellectual luminaries to whom God had accorded the highest prerogatives of creative genius, and whose power over the minds of men, should have been greater than that of Alexander or the Cæsars. What was their end? A sickly and evanescent glory hallows the grave of "Scotia's bard"—the glory of virtues that struggled for existence amid mighty vices, and which the power of early customs could not wholly quench or subdue;—but the siroco of voluptuousness is spread over his richest poesy and virtue, while it accords a willing homage to his god-like genius, yet shrinks withered and awe-struck from his poison page. And BYRON—that man whose magic pen has thrown fresh glory over the bright lands of chivalry and song—whose lyre, while it elevates the soul to the highest heaven of intellectual enjoyment—who throws around his reader the rosy bands of richest and loftiest inspiration, till the heart itself becomes instinct as it were with a new life—what and where was his end? In the land he loved, he died; but an exile from his friends—a banded outcast from the land that gave him birth!

"Farewell! a word that must be, and hath been—
A sound that makes us linger,—yet, farewell!
Ye! who have traced the pilgrim to the scene
Which is his last, if in your memories dwell
A thought which once was his, if on ye swell
A single recollection, not in vain
He wore his sandal-shoon, and scallop shell;
Farewell! with him alone may rest the pain.
If such there were—with you, the moral of his strain."

Maine Cult.

THE IDOLATRY OF WEALTH.

This insane and insatiable passion for accumulation, ever ready when circumstances favor, to seize upon the public mind, is that "love of money which is the root of all evil," that "coveteousness which is idolatry." It springs from an undue, an idolatrous estimation of the value of property.—Many are feeling that nothing, nothing will do for them, or for their children, but wealth; not a good character, not well trained and well executed faculties, not virtue nor the abode of heaven—nothing but wealth. It is their god and the god of their families. Their sons are growing up to the same worship of it, and to an equally baneful reliance upon it for the future; they are rushing into expenses, which the divided property of their father's house will enable them to sustain; and they are preparing to be, in turn and from necessity, slaves to the same idol. Truly is it written—that they who will be rich, fall into many temptations and snares, and many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in perdition and destruction. There is no need that they should be rich but they will be rich. All the noblest functions of life may be discharged without wealth, all its highest honors obtained, all of its purest pleasures enjoyed, yet I repeat it—nothing will do but wealth. Disappoint a man of this, and he mourns as if the highest end of his life was defeated. Strip him of this and all is gone. Strip him of this and I shall point to no unheard of experience when I say he had rather die than live.

GOVERNMENT OF CHILDREN.

Mrs. Conant, the editress of the Mother's Monthly Journal, gives a pretty good specimen of family management. It is easy enough to teach children to lie; only set the example and your business is half accomplished. How many there are who suppose children are born liars, or "wonder where they could learn to lie so." Mrs. C. publishes the following dialogue:—

Child. Mother, I want a piece of cake.

Mother. I hav'nt got any—its all gone.

C. I know there is some up in the cupboard—I saw it when you opened the door.

M. Well, you don't need any now; cake hurts children.

C. No it don't; (whining,) I want a piece of cake. I want a piece of cake.

M. Be still, I say; I shan't give you a bit if you don't leave off crying.

C. (Still crying,) I want a piece of cake; I want a piece of cake.

M. (Rising hastily and reaching a piece.)—There, take that, and hold your tongue! Eat it up quickly; I hear Ben coming. Now don't tell him you've had any.

(Ben enters.) C. I've had a piece of cake; you can't have any.

Ben. Yes I will mother; give me a piece.

M. There, take that; it seems as if I never could keep a bit of any thing in the house. You see, sir (to the child) if you get anything next time.

(Another room.) C. I've had a piece of cake!

Young Sister. Oh, I want some too.

C. Well, you bawl, and mother 'll give you a piece.

TIME FOR CUTTING GRAIN.

Numerous experiments have been made by cutting grain at the different periods, and it is found that the best time is when it is completely full in the milk, as when cut in that state it makes the finest flour, and gives a larger quantity than when cut at any other time.

Besides the advantage on account of the produce and the good quality of grain, there is some gain by cutting the straw so early, as it will make better fodder. Another important advantage is securing the grain against storms. Sometimes cutting early it can be secured before a long and severe storm, and thus escape destruction, which would have been the consequence of delay. And if the farmer intends to harvest early and he is hindered by a storm, it will be far less injurious to the grain than would be a storm at a later period, which would occasionally take place. By early cutting less grain will shatter out, and there will be less loss by fowls, birdsand varmints, and by the heads falling down.—Boston Cultivator.

THE CROPS.—From every quarter of the country we learn that the wheat harvest will be abundant. In Michagan it is thought there will be twice as much wheat as was grown there last year. In the middle States the June rains have produced a great change. But the season has been so dry that hay will not be very plenty.—Oats will not be so pleaty as they were last year.—Mass. Ploughman.

A Pretty Chambermaid.—In one of the villages on the banks of the beautiful Hudson, resides a very discreet, pious elder of the church, who had been for many years sans reproche. Very lately it was whispered about that he had a pretty chambermaid. The story spread with amazing rapidity. Old ladies spoke of it over their cups—young ones. It reached the ears of the minister. A few of the curious waited upon the elder to his no small surprise received visits by dozens daily—but no pretty chambermaid was soon. It was observed, however that he had a new attic story built, and it was universally believed that he kept the impudent chambermaid there. At length the story reached his ears, and he was determined to trace the matter to its source. He went to Mrs. Smith for her authority, who referred him to Mrs. Trown, who referred to the Johnsons, Dobsons and Robsons of the village, until finally he reached the author of the story.

"How is this sir?" he indignantly exclaimed, "I understand you have reported that I had a pretty chambermaid."

"I did."

"You shall answer for it—"

"I am ready."

"And that shortly."

"Now."

"Well, sir?"

"You erected an attic story to your building, and I said you had a pretty chamber made—and so you have."

THE WARM JULY OF 1825. July has thus far been unusually warm. We have not had so many hot days in succession since July 1825, just 20 years ago. In that year from the 12th to the 22d July, we had a continued succession of hot days, the thermometer ranging on several days from 98 to 102. The whole month of July in that year was intensely hot. Many persons lost their lives in consequence of heat, through excessive fatigue or imprudence in drinking cold water. Twenty-five or thirty fell victims in Boston alone. Two hundred deaths occurred in the first week in July in New York—60 more than ever before happened in any week. Thirty-three of these died from drinking cold water. The heat was equally destructive to the brute creation. A large number of horses in various places were lost by owners of stages; and even the fish in some of the ponds were suffocated, and died in large numbers through the intenseness of the heat. At the suggestion of the Mayor, the master work-men in Boston suspended their labor from 12 to 5 o'clock for several days. The air became so thoroughly heated as to afford no relief from the scorching ways of the sun. The ravages of death in consequence were melancholy in various parts of the country. On the 24th of July, twenty-five inquests were held in New York, over the bodies of persons who died suddenly from the effects of heat. Newburyp't Herald.

CHOOSING A WIFE.—Young men, a word in your ear. When you choose a wife, don't be fascinated with a dashing creature, fond of society, vain, artistical, and showy in dress. You do not want a doll or a coquette for a partner.—Choose rather one of those retiring, modest, sensible girls, who have learned to deny themselves, and possess some decided character. But, above all, seek for a good disposition. A popular writer well observes, that no trait of character is more valuable in a female than the possession of a sweet temper. Home can never be made happy without it. It is like the flowers that spring up in our pathway, reviving and cheering us. Let a man go home at night, wearied and worn by the toils of the day and how soothing is a word dictated by a good disposition. It is a sunshine feeling upon his heart. He is happy, and the cares of life are forgotten. A sweet temper has a soothing influence over the minds of a whole family. Where it is found in the wife and mother, you may observe kindness and love predominating over the bad feelings of a natural heart. Smiles, kind words and looks characterize the children, and peace and love have their dwelling there. Study to acquire and retain a sweet temper. It is more valuable than gold, it captivates more than beauty, and to the close of life retains all its freshness and power.

Be it enacted, &c.

Sec. 1. Every agricultural society entitled to receive money from the treasury of the Commonwealth, shall, in addition to the return of premiums paid, now required to be made in the month of January, make full returns of their doings into the office of the Secretary of State, on or before the first of January in every year embracing all reports of committees, and all statements of experiment and cultivation, deemed by the officers of the several societies worthy of publication.

Sect. 2. The secretary of each society, whether his return be in printed or manuscript form, shall mark, in a manner to be easily distinguished, those passages in the several reports and statements which he regards as most worthy of public notice. study and application

Sect. 3. The Secretary of State is directed to transmit a copy of this act to the secretary of every incorporated agricultural society in the Commonwealth, on or before the first day of September next.

Sect. 4. The Secretary of State is hereby directed to cause as full an abstract from said returns to be made and published in each year, for distribution, as in his judgment will prove useful.

Sect. 5. Any agricultural society which shall neglect, in any year, to comply with the provisions of this act, shall forfeit its claim to bounty from the Commonwealth the succeeding year.

Sect. 6. Any partsof passed act inconsistent with the provisions of this, are hereby repealed.

Approved by the Governor, March 7, 1845.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 26, 1845.

THE RAILROAD QUESTION.

The question whether we shall have a Rail Road from Salem through Danvers direct into Boston, or a Branch Road to connect with the Eastern Road at Salem, is exciting some attention now, as will appear from communications in our columns. We consider the question as a very important one, both in regard to the interests of Danvers, and as involving principles of the greatest importance to the future prosperity of the State. In regard to the claims of the two roads, our correspondents are perhaps better able to give information than ourselves. Our views have ever been that a new road will eventually be demanded, and constructed from Salem into Boston so as to avoid the Ferry. This we have no doubt of, whether a Branch is constructed or not. The construction of a Branch would probably delay the construction of a new road. Therefore the people will judge whether the immediate advantage, if any, to the place, from such Branch, will be greater than the injury from the delay in constructing a new road. This, it strikes us, is the ground upon which the question rests. We repudiate the doctrine held by some of our correspondents that the new road project should be abandoned on the ground that no charter can be obtained for it.—We think we have a right to a charter if we wish for one, and would not yield one jot or tittle of that right. We regard the idea that roads already constructed, should be considered in chartering subsequent roads, as of most mischievous tendency. We acknowledge no such principle, and would do all in our power to prevent the establishment of any precedent which will favor it. We watched with a great deal of interest the proceedings upon the application for a charter last winter. We regarded the refusal of a charter as the result of the peculiar notions of a majority in the Senate, upon the rights incidental to Rail Road corporations, assisted by efforts of interested corporations; but did not then have the slightest doubt, and have not since had, but that this decision would be reversed another Legislature. We took the broad ground which this state has always heretofore taken upon the subject,—that where the interests of the people required a new road, no discretion should be used by the Legislature in granting a charter for such road. It has been made out clearly that the public accommodation requires a road from Salem through Danvers into Boston, that it was only the necessity of such additional accommodation which suggested the project for a new road—and that such road would in all probability support itself handsomely. Upon this state of facts we contend that the Legislature, in accordance with the previous policy of the State, should have granted a charter for the road. The only thing which could influence them to refuse one, is the assumed immunities incident to the grant of the Eastern Rail Road Company's charter. On this point as we have said, we have no doubt. We declare war now and forever against such a principle being incorporated into the future policy of the State; and we would say to the Petitioners for the New Road, do not give up the project on the ground that you have no right for a charter to such a road.

THE NEW CITY ON THE MERRIMACK.

This great undertaking, so important to the interests of not only the immediate neighborhood of its location, but to the county itself, is in active progress and on a magnificent scale. At a recent visit to that vicinity, we took a bird's-eye view of the site of this future city of factory girls and cotton spindles. It was the original intention of its projectors to locate it on the south side of the river, and a liberal and even generous spirit was manifested by the citizens of Andover, by sales of their land to the Company at low prices, to induce them to make these improvements on their territory. There was however, an exception in the case of a third-rate lawyer who had been employed by the Company to obtain titles to such lands as were needed, and who made use of his knowledge thus honorably obtained, to get hold of an estate and demand a price so extortionate as would not be submitted to by the Directors of the Company, and they accordingly decided to locate their improvements on the Methuen side of the river. Thus has Andover been deprived of the benefit of this vast improvement, through the overreaching folly of one of her smallest men, assisted it is said, by a gentleman of great wealth in another place, who ought to feel above aiding in such a transaction. The people of Andover feel justly indignant about this affair, as the estate in question was recently bought for less than $3000, and the proprietors have had the modesty to demand $30 000 for it. Much as the Andover people may regret it, and well disposed as were the Directors of the Company to establish their town on the south side of the river, it is now believed by all that the site chosen has advantages superior to the Andover side. It is a level plain almost surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills on the north, while the south is bounded by the Merrimack whose water is to be made to flow through a grand canal 120 feet in width, through the centre of the place, to be used to drive the machinery of the factories and again find its place in the bed of the river. Hundreds of laborers are now engaged in excavating this canal, and the dam across the Merrimack is to be immediately commenced.

The place is to be laid out in the most approved manner, with streets of ample width and public squares adorned with trees and shrubbery for the health and recreation of its population. It is believed that this place is destined to be not only a more beautiful but a larger city than its neighbor Lowell, as it will have more water power and may avail itself of the advantage of water as well as of rail road transportation. It is more eligibly situated for building purposes, and its plan is more regular and pleasing to the eye. It requires some stretch of the imagination to look upon the now peaceful fields and wild woodlands of a sandy plain and fancy that in a very few years there will spring up a mighty city of brick and mortar, with its paved streets, its lofty Manufactories, its forest of chimnies, and the busy hum of an industrious population. But such is this now quiet spot destined to become. Its business will not only support its population at home but it will have an effect on the country around it, on Boston, on the cotton fields of the south, and even in China its fabrics will be sought, giving renewed activity to the mind and machinery of this new city on the Merrimack.

THE BURNT DISTRICT.

We learn that preparations are making to rebuild on the vacant space in Maple street and that Mr. Noyes intends putting up a substantial brick building which will serve as a barrier to the progress of fire. We hope this good example will be followed in all parts of the town. We had an opportunity recently to see a plan of this contemplated building which appears to be not only an elegant and tasteful structure but convenient in all its interior arrangements. This plan was drawn by Mr. LINCOLN PUTNAM, one of our own citizens and a gentleman of much skill as an architect. Persons about to build, will usually save in extras more than twenty times the cost of a plan by employing a competent architect and it is always more satisfactory to the contracters.

GRFAT FIRE IN NEW YORK CITY.

A most disasrtous and destructive fire occurred in New York City, on Saturday morning last, in which property to the amount of $5,000,000, or thereabouts was destroyed. The fire originated in a Soap Chandlery, in New street, and communicated to the store adjoining, thence to the rear of a building in Broad street, containing some combustible substance, which immediately exploded. and communicated the fire to the opposite side of the road. The following is the extent of the ravages:—

On the east side of Broadway, every building from Exchange Place, commencing with the Waverley House, to Marketfield-street, it utterly consumed; also three or four dwellings below Marketfield. The house on the corner of Stone and Whitehall streets, and two or three dwellings inued. Thence to Broad-street, Stone-street is the boundary. Through Broad-street, from Stone to the public streets, within two or three doors of Wall-street, the buildings on both sides are all destroyed. A line drawn from the public stores to the Waverley House, is the limit on the northwest. In Beaver-street all the buildings on both sides from the Bowling Green within five or six doors of William-street. On the west side of Broadway the buildings are all destroyed, from Harris-street to No. 13, occupied by Mrs. Barker as a boarding-house—this last included.

With the exception of the great fire of 1835 it was the most disastrous ever witnessed in that city—having destroyed according to the Tribune's estimate, 302 buildings, and property to the amount of from $5,000,000 to 10,000,000.

The number of lives destroyed has not been ascertained, but several are known to have been lost in various ways.

WORCESTER. By the following, which we extract from a Worcester paper, it seems that a good feeling prevailing there in relation to schools. It is to its liberal encouragement and attention to those institutions no doubt, that much of the high character of this nursery of Governors and other distinguished men may be attributed.

"At a meeting of the inhabitants of Worcester, on Saturday afternoon last, the town voted an appropriation of $1100, in addition to the $12,000, previously appropriated, for the completion of the Walnut Street School-house. This appropriation, which, we learn was made without a dissenting vote will be expended in procuring additional furniture, erecting fences, and grading and ornamenting the land about the building."

To our Readers.—We occupy this week much space on the Railroad question, to the exclusion of several valuable communications on that and other subjects. As this question is now, (prematurely perhaps) exciting much attention, our readers must excuse us for the omission of the usual variety. We must beg our correspondents to be as brief as possible, as our space is limited, and we wish to present such variety of matter as will be likely to suit the tastes of all.

"IS IT TRUE?"—We have received from the publishers, Messrs. KIMBALL & BUTTERFIELD, a copy of a pamphlet containing a "Wonderful Mesmeric Revelation, giving an authentic account of the discovery and description of a sunken vessel, near Caldwell's Landing, supposed to be that of the Pirate Kidd, including an account of his character and death, at a distance of nearly three hundred milas from the place." We fear a satisfactory answer to this query will not very soon be obtained.

☞We had on Tuesday morning last, another very severe Thunder storm, which was attended by a large quanty of rain. In the vicinity of Essex, much damage was done by the hail which fell in a narrow vein, and with such force as to break through the blinds of the meeting-house.—In Boston a block of six houses were struck, and considerably injured. A barn in Gloucester, was also struck but not much damaged.

RESERVOIR NEAR WASHINGTON ST.

We hope the next trial of Engines will take place at this Reservoir to give the people an idea of the excellent manner in which it is built and the inexhaustible quanity of water it contains.—We understand that the inhabitants in that vicinity are very grateful for this abundant supply of water and now feel confident that there can be no very extensive fire in that neighborhood.

We recommend this kind of cistern to other towns, as it costs nothing and when a fire happens the firemen have only to dig deep enough and they will find plenty of water. The only objection to the plan is, that the town will probably be burnt up before the water is found.

NIAGARA.

We understand, that the anniversary of the emancipation of Slavery, in the British West India Islands, will be celebrated at New Mills, on Friday next by a Pic Nic party.

We understand that the Society of the First Universalist Church in this town, propose to have a Pic Nic in connection with the Sabbath School of the Society, at the Beach near the Rockaway House, Marblehead, on Tuesday afternoon next.

FOR THE COURIER.

A correspondent of yours who seems to be in favor of granting liberty to the Eastern R. Road Company to construct a branch from Salem to North Danvers, over the route designated by the Georgetown and Danvers R. R. corporation, has in the article referred to, the following sentence viz—"Without question if a rail Road could be constructed from the Court House in Salem over the routes proposed the last Winter terminating at the Maine Extension Depot, and cars would run directly over the road without any interruption or detention at either end, as frequently as on the Eastern R. R., a mode of passing between the two Cities would be presented decidedly preferable to that over the Eastern R. Road." Here is an admission of an important fact, one that cannot amid all the misrepresentations, which have been or may be resorted to, be overthrown. And there is no question but that the Danvers Road would have been built had the citizens of Danvers kept themselves united upon the project, assisted as they would have been by many influential Citizens, of Salem and other towns, had they remained firm to the stand taken last Winter when it was voted in Town Meeting that the proposed branch to Salem, would never be satisfactory to the Citizens of Danvers while the Ferry remained as the terminus of the Eastern R. Road—this sentiment was responded to by all our citizens in a sincere and earnest manner, but the battle had hardly commenced when some of those who first enlisted in the cause, deserted it, and were found embracing other views and other sentiments. That the ferry will not be permanently satisfactory to the travelling community has been almost universally admitted, even the Rail Road Committee of last winter, steeped to the eyes as they were in the exploded notions of vested rights, hinted pretty strongly as was generally understood that the ferry would sooner or later have to be abandoned. Your correspondent then asks is their any probability of the Danvers route being built?—One of the principal circumstances which has created any improbability about it, is the unsatisfactory movements of some of those who were its first and most earnest advocates. A charter for it would have been obtained the last winter had it not have been for the influence and power of the large corporations who took their stand upon the ground of vested rights, sustained by a Committee previously pledged to that course of policy and from whom nothing favorable could ever have been reasonably expected.

The House of Representatives were right upon this question last winter—the Senate will be at the next session of the Legislature—the people, the sovereigns of the land have always been right, and will soon speak out in thunder tones. Your correspondent then enquires if the road would be profitable if built. He thinks that he Eastern R. Road would possess the power to destroy the value of the property by low fares.—Here is a road which he admits is decidedly preferable to the Eastern Road, and no one will question but that nearly the whole community would travel over it in the winter season. A road which lands its passengers at one of the most commodious depots in the world, very near to the centre of the city of Boston—a road which avoids a mile travel over tracks and barrels and bags and nuisances innumerable—and above all which avoids the dangers, and difficulties of the passage of the ferry in the winter season—a road which passes through a pleasent and leval country which lands many of its passengers at Boston in little more than half the time of the Eastern R. Road—which can deliver freight at 15 or 20 per cent less than the Eastern Road on account of the expense of crossing the ferry—a road with all these advantages costing about twenty thousand dollars a mile, run down by one which costs eighty thousand dollars a mile, with all the disadvantages of its unfortunate location—the reasoning of your correspondent may startle the timid and unstable but they who have looked the subject over with some care, and who, believing, as was frequently stated last winter by the counsel employed by the friends of the Danvers Road—that the inhabitants of Danvers would be gainers, if they built the road and never realized one cent for it—will adhere to the new Road; believing that if the road should be built the advantages which will be felt in the increase of business and the advance in the value of property would eventually more then compensate for all losses and inconveniences.

A

A meeting of the Georgetown and Danvers Rail Road Corporation was holden in South Danvers, on Wednesday last, for the purpose of taking into consideration the expediency of granting liberty to the Eastern R. Road Corporation to continue a branch Road from Salem through South Danvers to North Danvers. The subject was discussed somewhat at length; the whole question of the Branch and the construction of the new Road as proposed last winter was agitated, and a very strong feeling manifested that another trial for the new Road should be had at the next session of the legislature. The question of permitting the E R. Road to build a branch was negatived by a decisive vote.

FOR THE COURIER

SATURDAY, July 26, 1845.

Mr. Editor—There is a class of people in the community, whose estimate of their own opinions are such, that they think no views of any subject worthy of notice, unless they correspond with their own. It is a pity to disturb the self-complacency of such persons; and would they just keep their notions to themselves, and not attempt to mislead others, they should be left in the enjoyment of their own theories, however ill-founded they may be. These reflections occurred to my mind on the perusal of the article in this morning's paper signed "Truth," the writer of which, if at all related to the respectable family of "the whole truth," must at best be but "a far away cousin." Without adverting at all to the disingenuous personal inuendoes of the article, it is proper to remark, that the manner in which the writer has spoken of our SENATORS, and of the Rail Road Committee of the last Legislature; unless he is better prepared with facts in support of his assertions, than I believe him to be, is altogether unwarranted. It may be true, that this Committee early formed an opinion unfavorable to the views of the petitioners; but it by no means follows from this, that the opinion so formed was erroneous; or that it was the result of corrupt motives. Perhaps the disinterested and impartial view these gentlemen were enabled to take of the subject, and their superior intelligence in comprehending at the first glance, all the points proper to be considered in relation to it, might have induced the conclusion to which they came for reasons incapable of being appreciated by those who having once decided on a course of action, or even a speculative opinion, consider it a virtue to adhere to such decision, however erroneous it may be. I would not be understood as saying, that the circumstance of being in the Legislature gives any additional weight to the opinion of the individual. But I do think, that decency requires of us to admit, that gentlemen thus situated are honest in the opinions they entertain, and that they are not for slight reasons to be charged with being influenced by any collateral or corrupt considerations. Certain it is, that some gentlemen, who have made it their business to look into such questions as the expediency or propriety of the location of a Rail Road, will better understand the matter, in one half hour, than others equally intelligent on other subjects, will in a whole year.—Let any person attempt the study of the science of Rail Road operations, who has not heretofore given to it particular attention, and he will find after several weeks' application, that he knows much less than he supposed he did when he commenced. Such, sir, do I believe would be the case with every honest inquirer after truth, The application of this principle to the movements in relation to the Danvers Rail Road at the last session of the Legislature, will probably afford a satisfactory explanation of the present state of the question; and satisfactory reasons why the petition then presented should not be further pursued. When that petition was started, it was done for the purpose of inquiry, without any previous examination of the state of facts in support of it. All felt anxious for a Road that would bring better accomodation to themselves, if such road could be supported. To do this, it was necessary to prove an amount of business likely to be done on the road, adequate to this support. Was this done? Every one who has carefully compared the income that would accrue from the business to be done, with the expenses necessarily incident to the operation of the road, admits without hesitation that it would be in the power of the E. R. Road so to operate their road, as to destroy the value of the stock in the new proposed road. The only possible way of ever affording convenient Rail Road accommodations to the people of Danvers, will be, either by establishing a branch to the E. R. Road, as they proposed; or by establishing the new proposed road as a branch to the Maine Extension Road, to be under the control of that Company. It would be idle to think to sustain an independent Corporation for a travel of fifteen miles, between these two powerful Corporations, embracing a travel of more than one hundred miles each. No one will for a moment question the right of the people of Danvers to have rail road accommodation, and to have it in the manner they may elect; provided they can show the public convenience demands it.—But does the public convenience demand a road, where the business to be done, will not meet the expense of operating it? Who will be ready to take such stock? Is it not the part of wisdom, when we find ourselves on the wrong track, to retrace our sreps before it is too late? Because the E. R. Road was not rightly located at first, or because it now has objectionable incumbrances, are not sufficient reasons why we should deprive ourselves of the only available means of accommodation, when fairly offered for our use. Let those who have charge of these matters, lay aside prejudices and consult

COMMON SENSE.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—Your correspondent Truth seems to think that this is not the proper time to discuss the R.R. subject because the people are busy, &c, but consents to express what he conceives to be the true merits of the question, and agrees with me in the wish, that we may proceed harmoniously. I trust that a difference of opinion as to the means to be pursued will not interrupt the good feeling that has existed between the different parts of the Town, especially if the matter is discussed with the right feelings and views, and, as to the proper time I think the sooner we are corrected, if wrong, the better; and I trust there are very few in town that cannot find time to read the Danvers Courier, especially when it treats on the subject of our R. Road.

Friend Truth is mistaken in his assumption that I presumed that the doings of the legislature settles the question as to the Malden Branch. I said if the decision is correct, it settles the question. I meant, of course, that it was settled right; but the question at issue is, whether it is correct or not. If I should take such ground I should have to admit that the legislature acted right in refusing to give the E. R. R. Company the power to build a branch to North Danvers, if the citizens of Danvers should wish to have it done, and this I cannot do, and whatever improper influences may have operated in either case upon the action of the legislature, or by whom exerted, it is of little consequence as to merits of the question now.

But after an adverse discussion by the general court, founded upon avowed principles of public policy, and the evidence in the case as applicable to their principles, I think it becomes the duty of those who denounce the doings of the court and wish to have them reversed, to state fully their principles on the subject and show by the evidence as applicable, to their principles, that they are right; but has Truth in stating what he conceives to be the true merit of the questions attempted to do this? I think not unless it be in saying "that an examination proved satisfactorily that the road would support itself and the stock would be taken up" this may be his opinion but he has produced no evidence to assist others in forming the same opinion and I cannot find that Truth has attempted to state his views on the true merits of the question. What is the question? If I understand it right it is whether under all the circumstances of the case the Branch to Malden ought to be established and made and this would embrace all the benefits and all the injuries that would be done by it to all portions of the community not excepting R. R. corporations and stockholders in the new road. The use of the term, "vested rights," seems to be a very popular theme to prejudice the public against the legislature, when it refuses to grant new rail roads, I believe the term has been understood to mean, that when a charter has been given to a company to construct a certain R. Road, with privileges of taking fare for its support, the legislature has not the right to grant to another company the same priveleges if the operations of the new company would take from the old one any of its business, even if the public should desire ever so much benefit from the new Road. This doctrine is odious enough, and as Truth says would stop improvements; but I do not understand that our legislature has sanctioned this principle, or acted at all upon it, except it be in the Lowell case, where an exclusive privilege had been given within certain limits. It appears to me that this charge against the legislature, of adhering to the doctrine of vested rights, is made to drive the government to an entire disregard of the interests of corporations, by which great injustice may be done to them. Railroad charters are granted for the public good and those companies are expected to do every thing in their power to accommodate the public, and can they be justly required to do this unless they receive a reasonable protection from the public in return. I suppose all the portions of the public have certain vested rights; that is, rights and interests that the government is bound to protect as far as it can, consistent with the good of the whole, and it seems as if R. R. Companies who have their capital in roads when it would be lost if not protected, have at least a common right to the protection and care of the government while they conform to the rules prescribed by their charters.

Your correspondent speaks of draining the resources of the Town by a branch; if built by the Eastern R. Road our resources will not be drained in building it, which is more than can be said of the Malden Branch if it should ever be built; nor do I believe it will require more of our resources to pay the fares on the E. R. Road than on the Malden Road, nor near so much if the fares on each are at all graduated by what it will cost the respective companies to do the business of transportation. To show the contrast in this respect, I will suppose that it will cost each company the same amount to build and improve the branch from Salem to North Danvers and that it will cost the E. R. Road no more to draw the Danvers Trains over their Road between Salem and Boston, than it will for the new company to pay the Maine Extension Company for passing over their road and furnishing a depot at Boston,—and I think neither of these suppositions will be doubted—it will then follow that the whole expence of building the road from Danvers to Malden and of keeping it in repair, and of running the trains to Boston, would be an extra expense which the new company would have to meet more than the E. R. R. Company and for which there would be no extra income, except the small business of Lynn and Saugus. The interest on the capital and the expense of working the road and keeping it in repair would probably amount to more than 40,000 dollars a year. Cannot the old company afford to carry us for half the price that we can afford to carry ourselves on the new road?

Opening of Spring!

Magnificent, Chaste and Original Designs for Remodeling

"OAK HALL!"

FOR SPRING TRADE!

OPENING OF "OAK HALL" FOR THREE MONTHS!

Advice to Professional Men, Merchants Clerks with moderate Salaries, Farmers, Mechanics, Seamen, Firemen and others, VISIT OAK HALL!

ARRIVAL OF SPRING GOODS!

To Wholesale Dealers.

THE OPENING

This Morning, for Three Months!

I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements. The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compensated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effect of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respectable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, having its rusty suit of nature soon to be warmed in animation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green, So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next thing is to find a good place to fit out at a

REASONABLE PRICE,

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States :

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances,

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS

OR AS SOME SAY,

"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doing

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

HARRISON'S REMEDY

FOR THE PILES.

THIS is an ointment prepared by the undersigned and has been so thoroughly tested in so many different cases that I never hesitate to warrant relief to those who will give it a fair trial, observing the directions around each box which give a plain treatise on the disease and full instructions as to diet mode of cure, &c. One application at night never fails to relieve the greatest pain and anguish. I am ready to refer to numerous individuals who have proved this Remedy to be the safest, surest, speediest and cheapest

CURE FOR THE PILES.

My agent in Exeter writes thus : "the Pile Remedy which you left me is all sold, please send me soon a further supply, as a number of persons in this town think very highly of it. N. GILMAN."

MORE TESTIMONY.

Salem, Aug. 6. Mr. Harrison : The box of ointment which I had from you has worked like a charm—I have used it only one night, and I am cured I had used Hays' Liniment as I stated to you, with no benefit but rather was worse, it causing more inflammation. Yrs, J. W.

BLEEDING PILES CURED.

Mr. Harrison—Having given your Peristaltic Lozenges and Pile Remedy a fair trial, I have the satisfaction to inform you that they have operated wonderfully in my case. I had not been able for months to do any work at my trade, owing to exhaustion from bleeding, but I now feel myself cured. The severe pain which I had in my stomach is gone, and my strength is fast returning. I had used various remedies to no purpose, until I tried your medicine. I can also state that Capt. Benj. Ireson of this town, has also experienced great benefit from your Remedy. I cheerfully recommend the medicine to all suffering with that distressing complaint—the Piles.

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. John Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the sprung pads.—Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

May 31 JAMES FREDERICK FOSTER.

REMOVAL.

DR. J. A. ROBINSON,

SURGEON DENTIST,

SALEM,

WOULD respectfully give notice that he has removed from his old stand, opposite the City Hall, to No. 20 Washington street, recently occupied by A. E. Phillips, where he is ready to perform all operation, in Dentistry, in a most thorough and workmanlike manner.

His experience and success in inserting whole sets either by atmospheric pressure or springs, enables him to furnish them at rates which cannot fail to suit those in want of an article of superior quality.

His method of inserting Teeth, both singly and on plate, with or without Gums, has been found to be satisfactory and successful as combining beauty of finish and adaptation, with all the requisites of mastication and articulation.

Particular attention paid to filling Teeth so as to render them serviceable for many years, and also to the regulation of Children's Teeth.

N. B. For sale as above, a first rate article of TOOTH POWDER. 6m mch 15

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subscriber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

Fales Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for people of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, that of pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth, paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit. The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with full directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamation of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles, and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extensively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street, Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creaturcs can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

NEW LUMBER WHARF.

THE subscriber having taken the wharf, called the WEST wharf, near the Bridge, in South Salem, would take this opportunity to inform his friends and the public generally, that he intends to keep for sale an assortment of BOARDS, JOIST, CLAPBOARDS, SHINGLES, PICKETS, LATHS, etc. etc., of as good quality as can be found in the city.

He has now on hand 300,000 dry Boards and Plank for sale, and all wishing to purchase, are respectfully invited to call and examine for themselves.

He has also made arrangements at the Eastward for furnishing Dimension Frames, and filling orders of every description, at short notice.

Having been a practical builder for the last fifteen years, the subscriber flatters himself that his knowledge of the business, and the Lumber trade generally, will enable him to give satisfaction to those who may favor him with their patronage.

As he will be at the Eastward part of the time, he will be able to give his personal attention to the purchasing of Lumber, etc. He has made arrangements with Mr. A. F. CLARK to be on the wharf during business hours, who will wait upon those who may favor him with a call.

POETRY.

LIFE'S SUNNY SPOTS.

Though Life's a dark and stormy path,
Its goal the silent tomb,
It yet some spots of sunshine hath,
That smile amid the gloom.
The Friend, who weal and woe partakes;
Unchanged whate'er his lot.
Who kindly soothes the heart that aches,
Is sure a sunny spot.

The Wife, who half our burden bears,
And utters not a moan;
Whose ready hand wipes off our tears,
Unheeded all her own;
Who treasures every kindly word,
Each harsher one forgot,
And carols blithely as a bird—
She's too a sunny spot.

The Child, who lifts at morn and eve,
In prayer its tiny voice;
Who grieves whene'er its parents grieve,
And joys when they rejoice;
In whose bright eyes young Genius glows,
Whose heart, without a blot,
Is fresh and pure as Summer's rose,
The child's a sunny spot.

There's yet upon Life's weary road,
One spot of brighter glow,
Where Sorrow half forgets its load,
And tears no longer flow;
Friendship may wither, love decline,
Our child his honor blot;
But yet undimmed that spot will shine—
RELIGION lights that spot.

A great unknown (says the St. Louis Reveille) in an exchange paper relates, in very touching verse, the opposite fates of two early friends; the little tale has a great moral:—

One took a paper, and his life
Was happier than a king's
His children all could read and write,
And talk of men and things.

The other took no paper, and
While strolling through the wood,
A tree fell down upon his crown,
And killed him—as it should.

Had he been reading of the news
At home, like neighbor Jim,
I'll bet a cent that accident
Would not have happened him.

SELECTED TALES.

THE STOLEN MINIATURE.

BY MRS. R. S. NICHOLS.

"The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent, no more.' OTHELLO.

It was near midnight, on one of the beautiful summer evenings that brood over our Western Land, as some fair spirit hovers near to Paradise—and which can be realized only by those who have witnessed them—that one of the numerous steamers that throng the waters of "La Belle Riviere," paused on its upward course before a small town which lay upon the bank of the aforesaid stream. When the boat had effected a landing, a few passengers, who either blind to the charms of Morpheus, or more allied to those of sundry packs of cards, that strewed the tables of the "social hall," stepped upon shore to enjoy a monlight view of the village. Among the number was a group of three individuals, who withdrawing from the rest, strolled carelessly along one of the principal streets, until they arrived at a cross, turning down whose short but secluded walk, several large buildings, evidently the residences of the most wealthy portion of the inhabitants, were situated. As they passed into this beautiful and peaceful retreat, a slight whispering, which presently broke forth into loud and angry words, disturbed the slumbering echoes of the night.

"I tell you, Layton, it is impossible! I will not—cannot do it!"

"Spoken like a fool, and a milksop, as you are; there is a way to stop your whining scruples, and curse me if I'll not show it you."

Quick as thought, the first speaker turned, and confronting his companion, exclaimed in a voice trembling with passion,—"Ay, there is a way to rouse the sleeping devil, even in my coward frame; but your threats fall regardless upon my ear, while I have this good blade to protect me,"—and a long glittering Bowie knife flashed beneath the soft rays of the harvest moon.

"By heavens! I believe you both to be mad! Put up your knife, Bradley, and you, Layton, keep your infernal tongue within your teeth, unless you want to have this goodly town about our ears."—This soothing speech was spoken by the third, and hitherto silent companion, and while the altercation is progressing in lower tones, you my gentle reader, shall have a Daguerreotype sketch of at least one of the party.

Bradley Spencer was the son of one of the most wealthy and aristocratic planters in Louisiana, but maternal affection he never knew, at least was not conscious of it, his mother having been snatched away in his childhood, by one of the fearful epidemics peculiar to that portion of the South. His father, a high-principled noble-minded man, richly endowed with the warm blood and chivalrous feelings of the Southerner, having thus lost that which he considered as the better part of life, gave his undivided heart to this "sole scion of his stock," and for his boy's sake, no second lady darkened his hall, or cast a shadow over the golden sunlight of the young heir's youthful existence. Thus fondly nurtured and cherished, every wish indulged to the utmost, the young Bradley grew apace; but with all his paternal prejudice, the elder Spencer could but note the wavering acts and vacillating mind of his darling boy betokening, even in youth, the indecision of the man. With prophetic sorrow, he saw the consequences entailed on one, who, ever willing to follow had no projects to offer, or will of his own, to oppose those of others. To eradicate this "crying evil," the boy was sent, at the age of fifteen, to college. There, at least, argued the parent, he will learn independence of thought and expression. But how widely was he mistaken!—An universal favorite among his class-mates, winning "golden opinions" from all, by his pliant disposition, and suavity of manners, and being allowed an unlimited sum for his passing expenditures, he bore the palm, and reigned any thing but a despot, over his firmly-minded companions. It is not our intention to follow him through the mazes of college life, and we pass in silence over the four succeding years, when at the age of nineteen, he was re-called, to receive the last blessing and injunctions of a dying father. Still true to his erroneous system of indulgence, Mr. Spencer left his property to the unlimited control of his son, fondly imagining, that unlimited sway would overcome the imbecile principles of youth, and teach him that firmness of mind, and stability of purpose, so essential to manhood.

Youth is the season of luxury and enjoyment. Joy is evanescent; and grief, in the young bosom is but the sudden o'ercasting of a summer sky; the cloud passes away, and the bow of promise is bent in the now smiling heavens. Thus was it with Bradley's grief; a few short weeks in New Orleans did wonders; they initiated him in the mysteries and delights of the gaming table; they did more; they introduced him to the lowest haunts of vice and infamy, cloaked, indeed, for the decoy of this rich windfall; but so thin and flimsy was the protecting veil of decency and morality, that any other than Bradley Spencer's eyes would have pierced the wily folds, and laid bare the monsters lurking behind them. Thus early possessed with the fatal passion of gaming, night saw the infatuated youth wound deeper and deeper in the toils of his betrayers. Mortgage after mortgage was given,—though not having a shadow of legality about them, they were accepted as eagerly by these human leeches, as the red gold for which they had sold their souls to perdition. The men with whom it was Spencer's fate to be connected, were most of them from thirty to forty years of age; wily, unprincipled villains, well calculated to govern the simple youth, whom they remorselessly plundered of all at his present command, and accepted his honor as pledge for the rest, when he should become of age. Nor were the months tardy in their flight. At the end of two short years, his property was formally yielded by his passive guardian, and the day that gave him house, and land, stock and slave saw him resign it to the fiends who had possessed him with a love of all that was degrading to human nature, and taught him to scoff at all who were truly poor and virtuous.

It is the same Bradley Spencer, kind reader, whose brief career we have endeavored to trace, that we left in the little village, with his knavish companions, who, fresh from the hiding places of loathsome vice, were intent on drawing the young man into yet greater depths of wickedness. But they struck upon the wrong chord—Spencer had been culpable, most culpable, it is true, but he was to himself his worst foe; he had not willingly injured others, but had been the dupe in every instance. Thus, when his brutal comrade expressed his determination to rob one of the habitations before them, and urged his assistance, his nobler spirit that had slept so long, was aroused, aad he gave vent to his feelings in the manner we have described.

Brief was their consultation, and the arguments they held with him bade fair to be of no avail, until the elder and more polite villain, declared that Bradley could not withdraw now in honor, as they should suspect he meant to betray them; that they would not require his assistance, if he had any foolish prejudice to the contrary; but he should accompany them as a mere looker-on. Without pausing for an answer, he passed his arm into that of the young man's, and followed by Layton, they stepped into a small yard, at the gable end of one of the mansions. There a window had been left open by the unsuspecting inmates, for the benefit of the air. Springing lightly in, he was followed by the others. Groping their way by the light of a dark lantern, which Layton pulled from the bosom of his coat—thus showing himself perfectly au fait in such proceedings—they ascended a staircase, and pausing in a long passage, bade Bradley be watchful, and give a low whistle upon the slightest alarm. The two less scrupulous ruffians then pursued their way down the passage. What Spencer's reflections would have been, he had not leisure to ascertain, for fancying he heard a low breathing, like one in a deep slumber, he turned and discovered, by the light of the moon, which was streaming in at a window near, a door, the which on applying his hand yielded to the impulse. Impelled by curiosity, or some more definable feeling, he stepped softly into the room. A night-lamp was burning dimly upon a table, near a small couch, where, in her bright and youthful loveliness, slept a fair girl. Scarce had the breath of sixteen summers passed over the clear brow that lay upturned in its marble whiteness, for.

weighed down the veined lids, the long dark lashes of which rested on the faintly-tinged cheek beneath. As Spencer turned from this unexpected vision, his glance fell on a small book, that lay open on the table. Some light pencil mark, that pointed to an admired passage, drew his attention. As he bent to read, his brow crimsoned, and his frame trembled with emotion. It was a volume of the ill-fated Shelley's Poems, open at "Adonais," and as he read

"Remorse and self-contempt shall cling to thee, Hot shame shall burn upon thy secret brow," a full sense of his degradation, and how he had "fallen from his high estate," rushed upon his stricken heart, and feelings that had slumbered long, were now fully awakened by the thrilling lines of the mystical poet, and the strange scene before him. As he turned quickly to leave where his presence was a sacrilege, his attention was caught by a small miniature, one glance at which shewed him the waking likeness of the sleeping beauty before him. Involuntarily catching it, he fled from the room, and giving the signal agreed upon, to his companions, the next moment saw them wending their way to the boat, which, having discharged the freight that detained her, was soon flying upon her onward course.

THREE years had passed away, since Bradley Spencer, leagued wih common thieves, accompanied them on their nefarious night expedition, in the little village already mentioned. Bradley Spencer, then the companion of gamblers and low debauchees, was now Henry Murray, the trusted head clerk of one of the most wealthy mercantile houses in New York. From the ever memorable night of the robbery, the wretched young man forsook his unworthy associates. "Remorse and self-contempt" did indeed cling to him, and despair and shame at first conquered his remaining energy. But the spirit was present with him; it only needed to be roused into action. He had parted with his last dollar, when he arrived in New York, and the change of name was decided on to soothe the pride that came to his aid after so long a time. Deprivation only rendered him stronger in his virtuous purposes, thus proving at once the false system of indulgence adopted by his parent.

Clement Archer, Esq., was a stern, unbending business man. Strictly moral in his walk before men, he required all around him to show the same regard for the welfare of society. With a heart filled with benevolence, though veiled with an air of sternness he received Bradley in his counting house, as Henry Murray, knowing it to be a fictitious name, for Spencer scorned to impose on his benefactor in this respect and though Bradley's past history was a sealed book which his employer never attempted to pry into, he could not help fancying some misdemeanor had driven the young man from his home and friends. He contented himself, therefore, by placing a strict watch upon his conduct, but after months had passed away, indeed, years, and saw Henry the same ttentive, hard-laboring clerk he was at first, his patron took pleasure in showing him favor, and in placing the most unlimited confidence in him. Thus had the years glided by. That Henry was comparatively happy, we admit, but many an agonizing night had passed, ere he acquired even this slight tranquility, and shall we confess it, kind reader? the stolen miniature, the witness of his involuntary crime, was cherished as a precious relic, for instead of serving to remind him of his errors, and fill him with shame, it was regarded as a mute angel, that had snatched him from ignominy and vice. And who could blame him for loving to look upon that fair countenance, with its deep and eloquent eyes forever speaking of the intellectual worth within? It was not so much the beautiful form of the features, that arrested the gaze, as the whole-soul expression that shone around them. Long would the infatuated youth gaze on the memento of his crime, but there was little penitence in his looks, and not one thought of sorrow for the grief the loss of it must have given the fair original for enclosed in the back was a braid of dark hair slightly silvered with grey, and beneath was engraved, "from a fond mother to her daughter, on her sixteeth birth-day."

Bradley had carefully avoided every print which he thought likely to contain the intelligence of the robbery, and as no communication passed between himself and the perpetrators on this subject, he was consequently ignorant of the amount abstracted, or the names of the sufferers.

It was a cold winter morning, when Mr. Archer suddenly entered his counting-house and ordered it to be immediately closed. On Henry's (for so must we call him) looking up, he perceived his friend's countenance was clothed with grief, and the fresh crape upon his hat told that death had been busy with his house. Bidding Henry, who was domesticated in his family, accompany him home, he informed him that he had just received letters announcing the death of an only and well-beloved brother, and added, he was hourly expecting the arrival of an neice, now committed to his charge. His companions asked no questions, for fear of stirring the fountain of grief afresh.—On entering the drawing-room at night, he was presented to Miss Archer, but what was his surprise and consternation on lifting his eyes to her face, to see the fair sleeper before him! The face was paler than the miniature's, and wore a more chastened and somewhat older expression, for sorrow had indeed visited her. Both parents had slept their last sleep since she slumbered so unconsciously in his presence. Stammering forth some faint apologies, Bradley left the room and the house, and who may say what wild visions thronged his restless couch that night!

Months glided away, Mr. Archer beheld, with some slight misgivings, the growing intimacy between his neice and Henry. Not but that he would have willingly have given her to his protege, could the cloudy mystery which hung over the young man have been cleared to his satisfaction. But during the three years Henry had been with him, he had never received letter or communication, of any kind, from friend or foe. For a young man to stand so utterly alone, "looked strange," to say the least of it.

Entering the room one evening, where Miss Archer and Henry were sitting, her uncle, in a light and laughing tone, said,

"How is this, Emily? Young Dalton has been making serious complaints concerning the obduracy of heart of an ungrateful neise of mine.—What has he done to provoke her displeasure? and why won't she wed?"

"Nay, dear uncle, you know my heart and hand have long been pledged to the restorer of my miniature."

"And so my Emily stands pledged to a nameless robber? Would she like it to reach his ear through the walls of a prison?

"Most sincerely do I hope he is free, for he must be a gentle ruffian, and having stolen naught but my picture, I can't find it in my heart to be very angry; the compliment, dear uncle, only think of the compliment!"

"Ay but the compliment paid to your father was a little more costly, was it not?"

"With that I have nothing to do," replied Emily, blushing; "but I would willingly forgive the robber, would he restore my mother's gift," and the tears sprang to her eyes, at the mention of her loss. Mr. Archer saw her emotion and said no more. But Bradley, how did he hear the secret? How often was he tempted, as he heard the beautiful and enthusiastic girl plead for him so eloquently, and regret the loss of what was so dear to her, to throw himself on her mercy and confess all, but happily he restrained his emotion, and soon after left the apartment.

"Now, gentlemen, while you are discussing your hot rolls and coffee, I will read this delightful retailer of news and scaundal," exclaimed Miss Archer, on seating herself at the breakfast table, the morning succeeding the conversation already detailed. "Here is 'latest foreign news,' 'home affairs,' 'politics' and 'poetry,' which will you have? Ah! let me see; here is a mysterious affair:

'The Governor of Louisiana offers five hundred dollars reward to any person or persons, who will intimate any knowledge of the residence of one Bradley Spencer, or satisfactorily prove that said Bradley is living. He having left New Orleans about three years since, in company with a party of gamblers, and not having since been heard of, it is feared by his friends that he has fallen a victim to the machinations of the said men, as through a confession lately made by one of the party, who was stabbed in a affray, Spencer will be restored his property, of which the was most nefariously deprived. Should this meet his eye he is earnestly requested to return and take possession of the same.'"

As Emily read this paragraph in a clear, distinct voice, Mr. Archer fastened his eye on the young man who sat at his table. No power on earth could have controlled Bradley's emotions and after the reader paused, Mr. Archer arose, and taking his hand, said,

"Be candid, Henry; whatever faults you have been guilty of, these last three years have expiated.——"

"You know not half my rash acts," passionately interrupted the young man; "you would both loathe and spurn me, were I to tell all; but I will perform one just act. Miss Archer," taking the miniature from his bosom, "here is the deity that has preserved me from sin, and before you stands the—robber!"

Both Mr. Archer and Emily were mute with surprise and amazement at this confession; but when they eagerly questioned him, and learned what he had to offer in extenuation, it is needless to say he was freely forgiven.

It is sufficient to add that Bradley recovered the major portion of his property, and as he gazes upon the generous and forgiving girl, who is now his bride, he invokes blessings on the being, who, by the interposition of a Divine Providence was the means of preserving him from the "gambler's fate."

MISCELLANY.

Correspondence of the Danvers Courier.

Woburn, July, 1845.

Dear Courier—At this season of the year when all Nature is clothed in her loveliest robes, how invigorating to an exhausted frame

"To steal awhile, away
From every cumbering care,"

And with a mind at ease, spend a few days or weeks in rambling among the green hills and by the quiet streams of some of our retired New England towns. For this purpose I have chosen this ancient but lovely village, and having an opportunity I will pencil you a few lines.

The principal village of Woburn is situated about ten miles from Boston, and about fourteen from Danvers, and is completely hemmed in by lofty hills. At the early settlement of the town, much annoyance was experienced from the Indian tribes in the vicinity, and to secure themselves against their attacks, or from superior facilities in defending themselves, the inhabitants erected upon the summit of one of these hills, their first place of worship, from which circumstance it has ever since been called "Meeting House Hill."—The population of Woburn is rapidly increasing, and we should judge by appearances that a spirit of enterprize is possessed by many of its citizens. There are several large tanneries, shoe and other manufactories in the different villages, while a considerable portion of the town is improved by the industrious husbandmen, and I think but few places in New England can compare with this in the neatness of its residences, in several of which much taste as well as skill has been used, to render them pleasant and attractive. Among them is the Horn Pond House which has recently been purchased by Mr. Sturgis of Boston, as a private residence.

A branch railroad has recently been constructed from the Lowell track to the centre of the town, and will undoubtedly aid much in increasing its population and improving the business facilities.

This morning I made an excursion to Lexington which is about five miles from Woburn, and visited the spot on which the first blood of our glorious Revolution was shed, and received from an eye-witness an interesting account of that thrilling incident. The person to whom I refer is Levi Harrington, Esq., who has now reached the age of eighty-five, yet still retains in a remarkable degree, his intellectual powers, and a good share of health and strength. He resides with his son whose hospitality to strangers seemed to me al- most unbounded) in the immediate vicinity where the battle occurred, and near which a monume has been erected. He is visited every year hundreds who are attracted to this cherished spo It seems really to be a source of gratification him to repeat from memory the thrilling scen and circumstances connected with the ever mem orable Battle of Lexington, some of which a not mentioned in the usual narrations of this ever

The monument is very similar in constructi and material to that in Danvers, and is located an elevated spot a few rods from the place whe the old church stood. On the side facing the ro is an appropriate inscription.

The house which was formerly occupied John Hancock, the frame of which was broug from England, is still standing, and I understan is soon to be occupied by its present proprietor.

A railroad is now in process of constructi between Boston and Lexington, which will u questionably prove beneficial to the latter plac as it will induce many of the wealthy of Bost to seek here a retired residence.

And here, Dear Courier, for want of room, am compelled abruptly to close and subscri myself,

CORN COBS.—We copy the following from th Maine Cultivator, which paper by the way usual ly contains a large amount of useful informatio for farmers. It is printed every Saturday at Ha lowell, Me., and the subscription price is only $ per annum.

Never suffer your cobs to be thrown into th yard. The only economical method of disposin of them is to grind them with the corn. The co contains a large amount of farina, which, wi proper care in the preparation, affords an excelle material for bread. By crushing the ears of cor and subjecting them to the operation of a suitabl mill, a very excellent article will be obtained—th cob being usually worth from one fourth to on third as much as the corn. Another method is shell the corn, and prepare the cobs by soakin them in a pickle. With this view, it is necess ry to provide a half hogshead tub, or other lar vessel, into which the cobs may be turned, a then submerged in strong brine. After absorbin a sufficient quautity of this liquid, they are fed the animals at the rate of from half a peck to peck per day. Grinding, however, is the mo economical, as then there is nothing lost; the e tire substance of the cob being eaten without po sibility of loss to the feeder.

COLD WATER FOR SUMMER

The following is a simple mode of renderin water almost as cold as ice; Let the jar, pitche or vessel used for water be surrounded with one more folds of coarse cotton, to be constantly we The evaporation of the water will carry off th heat from the inside and reduce it to a freezin point. In Indida and other tropical regions whe ice cannot be produced, that is common. Le every mechanic or laborer have at his place employment two pitchers thus provided, and wit lids or covers—the one to contain water for drink ing, the other for evaporation—and he can alway have a supply of cold water in warm weather.—Any person can test this by dipping a finger i water, and holding it in the air of a warm day after doing this three or four times, he will fin his fingers uncomfortably cold.

POTATO BLIGHT.

It grieves us to state that the blight which cause such destruction to the potato crop last year, has thus early, commenced its ravages the presen season. We have examined a field belonging t Gov. Lincoln, which, we are assured, exhibited perfectly healthy appearance on the 3d inst. O the 5th, portions of the vines showed indication of disease, on the 7th, about one half of them were more or less shriveled, many of them shrank to one half of their former dimensions, and some of the leaves already turned brown and nearly dry. The potatoes were of the red variety, some times called the peach blows. The seed was selected, and in a fine and apparently healthy state. We opened one of the hills most affected with the disease, and found the seed still sound and apparently healthy. Some of the new set potatoes were about the size of a robin's egg, and looked well. So far as we observed the disease commences at the upper part of the vine.—Mass. Spy.

ILLINOIS AGRICULTURE.

A friend of ours, who has just returned from a tour to prairie land, advises us of a fact which we think will give a pretty striking idea of the great agricultural resources of the State of Illinois, and the important bearing which they are like to have upon the farming interests of other sections of the Union, when the rich prairies of this large State shall generally be brought under cultivation. In speaking with a gentleman from Mississippi whom he met at Chicago, and who had traversed a large portion of Illinois in his journey, in reference to the condition of the crops, he was told by him that in particular sections he was surprised at the immense field of wheat which were spread out before him, apparently without disconnection other than by cross roads, and on inquiring of a farmer, who occupied a part of the land, as to the number of acres thus under cultivation, in juxtaposition, in that vicinity, he was informed that, by the carefullest computation that could be made, there were at least forty thousand acres: and the immense field gave promise of a yield per acre far exceeding that of any previous year.—Buffalo Commercial.

The Presbyterian says twenty-six ministers in connection with the Old School Assembly have died in about a year.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, AUGUST 2, 1845.

ESSEX AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

We notice that the Trustees have announced their Annual exhibition which is to take place at Ipswich in Sept. next. We have a suggestion to make to the Committee of Arrangements which we hope may obtain their attention. It is in relation to the exhibition of manufactures. Great annoyance to the committee and the public has been suffered for many years past from the very crowded state of the room, so much so that it has been almost impossible for a visitor to see, much less examine half the articles exhibited. It has sometimes been almost dangerous for a female to venture an entrance through the crowded doors and after having reached the room it has been actually impossible to move about to see the articles, or to return. We know there has been great complaint and we think justly. Our suggestion is this. Let a small admittance fee be asked of all visiters except contributors to the exhibition, and let the amount so received be applied by the Committee in additional gratuities to the skillful claimants. We believe that such an arrangement would be much more satisfactory to visiters than the usual jam at this exhibition, and those who witness the skill displayed will then have the satisfaction of contributing something to its reward.

Another suggestion to the Committee in this department. Its duties are arduous and take much time. They should commence examining the articles early in the morning and not wait for a quorum of the Committee or for all the articles to arrive. Some delay is necessary, but the public is impatient and clamors for admission. We hope our suggestions will have all the attention they deserve and be received in the same kind spirit with which they are given.

PIC NICS.

This has been a great week for these pleasant social gatherings, several of which have taken place in this town, conducted by religious and other associations. The first of the series was on Tuesday by Rev. Mr. Bulkley's (the 1st Universalist) Society at New Mills, a description of which will be found below which has been kindly furnished by a friend who was present.

On Tuesday last, the children, teachers and parents connected with the Sunday School of the First Universalist Society in this town made an excursion to Phillips's beach. The procession, numbering about fifty carriages, and containing two hundred and fifty persons, formed quite an imposing array, and attracted no small share of attention in the different places through which it passed on the route. The day was one of the finest of the season, and a happier company is seldom seen than that assembled under the pavilion erected near the beach, to witness the exercises and participate in the festivities on that occasion. Never were arrangements better made than were those under the direction of the faithful and energetic superintendent of the school; never was there a more agreeable excursion. It was indeed a day of delight. The children gambolled in the full exuberance of spirit, while the older part of the company strolled along the beach catching views of the ocean and of the magnificent scenery extending along the coast on either hand, and inhaling the invigorating breezes from the mighty Atlantic, that spread itself out before them and rolled its waves at their feet. The exercises of the school, that occupied a portion of the time, were of an exceedingly interesting and pleasing character. A piece written expressly for the occasion and sung by the children, was received with much applause. Several of the pieces that were spoken, relating to the subject of temperance, were well timed and appropriate. Where all acquitted themselves so well it is useless to particularize. The Glee Club in attendance, under the direction of Mr. B. H. Osgood, discoursed spirit-stirring music and contributed in no small degree to heighten the pleasures of the excursion. At the conclusion of the services, the company partook of a bountiful collation provided for them by Mr. Tilton, of the Rockaway House, whose good taste and judgement in such matters seems to be well understood and appreciated by the public. This part of the arrangement we think, must have been exceedingly gratifying to the ladies, as they were thereby saved the trouble and drudgery, incident to taking provisions along with them, as the manner of some is. The report being ended, the joyful company returned to their homes, grateful for what they had witnessed and enjoyed, and without a solitary accident to mar their enjoyment.

On Wednesday, the 2nd Universalist Society held their annual festival at a beautiful spot on the borders of Wenham pond. The day was unfavorable, there being light showers most of the afternoon, which although it wet the ground did not have the effect to dampen the spirits of the company, as they all repaired to their vehicles and conversed as cheerfully and sang as blithely as if the unclouded sun had been shining above them. At length the clouds scattered, the rain ceased and the sun was partially visible. The ladies improved the time in spreading the tables which were soon bountifully provided with an abundance of eatables and temperate drinks sufficient for even a larger company than was present to partake of them.

A procession of the Sabbath School pupils was now formed, followed by the adults and all marched into the grove and arranged themselves at the tables. Rev. Mr. Prince the pastor, called the company to order and announced a familiar hymn which was sung by the children aided by select members of the choir. Rev. Mr. Eaton of Newburyport then offered a prayer, fervent and appropriate, after which the company were invited to partake without ceremony of the good things before them. A simultaneous attack was made on eatables and drinkables until full credit was given to the skill and good taste of the fair providers of the banquet.

It was the intention to have had performances by the children, and exercises by the clergy and others who were present, but symptoms of another shower appearing, it was thought best to repair to the carriages and start for home.

Among the invited guests present, we noticed the venerable Gen. Foster, who, at the age of 96 years has not lost his relish for social and friendly intercourse with the generations now upon the stage of life.

One of the principal attractions especially to the young, was the performer on the Scotch bag pipe. He was equipped in the full costume of a Highlander with tartan kilt and bonnet.

"All plaided and plumed in his tartan array," and his picturesque appearance and noble form called to mind the vivid descriptions by Walter Scott of this interesting and hardy race of men.

We observed a little fellow about 30 inches high, who was inquiring very anxiously after the Pic nic. He wanted very much to see it and when the Highlander was pointed out to him, appeared in high glee at the sight of such a rare creature as a Picnic.

On the same day, Rev. Mr. Braman's Society held a similar festival by invitation of Hon. Daniel P. King, at the grove near his residence.

Yesterday there was another Picnic celebration held at Porter's Grove in commemoration of the West India Emancipation of Slaves.

BUILDING LOTS.

We would beg leave to call the attention of our readers to the extensive Auction sale of Building Lots, which will take place on Monday next, at 3 o'clock P. M. These lots are pleasantly situated and are well worthy the attention of those desirous of purchasing, as such an opportunity rarely occurs.

SMOKING IN THE STREETS.

This dangerous practice seems to be continued with more pertinacity than ever. Nothing is more common than to see even mere children, boys hardly in their teens, swaggering along the streets in the evening, puffing a cigar almost as long as themselves and casting away the fiery remnant only to make room for another cigar which is lighted with a friction match and this is then thrown to the winds. While this practise continues not only by boys but by those full grown men who ought to set a better example, what security have we against fire? One would think that in this hot weather those in the habit of going about with burning chimneys under their noses all day might at least have their fires quenched in the evening. Why is not that wholesome bye-law of the town against this dangerous practice enforced?

SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES—Our readers will see by the advertisement in another column, that a new term of Mr. Jewett's Female School in Salem, will commence on Sept. 1st. The Principal and Assistants in this seminary enjoy a high reputation as teachers of youth, the former having been formerly employed as Tutor at Amherst College, and being in every respect fitted to take charge of such a school, we recommend to our citizens this institution as one where young ladies may obtain an education in all the useful and ornamental branches.

☞A FIREMEN'S PIC NIC has, we understand, been proposed by some of the engine companies of this town, in which all the companies should unite in procession, and proceed to some rural retreat, and by an oration, speeches, &c, spend a few hours in innocent and profitable recreation. We trust the proposition will meet with the hearty co-operation of the several officers and members of the fire department.

A CONFERENCE OF CHURCHES

Will be held in the Church of the First Parish (Unitarian) in Gloucester, on Tuesday next. Exercises of the afternoon will commence at 3 o'clock. Those of the evening, at 7. Christian friends, clergy and laity, are respectfully invited to attend.

The Royal Mail Steamer Cambria, Capt. Judkins, arrived at Boston on Wednesday afternoon about 5 o'clock, in the unprecedented short passage of 11 days and 4 hours from Liverpool! She brings 101 passengers to Boston, leaving 5 at Halifax.

Installations in Lexington. We learn from the Lowell Courier that Rev. Theodore H. Dorr was installed Pastor of the Unitarian Society in East Lexington on Wednesday 2d ult.

On Wednesday the 30th ult., the Rev. Mr. Whitman, late of Portland, was installed Pastor of the Old Parish Unitarian Church in Lexington. Sermon by Rev. A. P. Peabody, of Portsmouth.

FIRES IN BOSTON. On Friday the 25th inst., there were eight attempts to set fire in Boston—there was however little damage done, owing to the active exertions of the firemen.

EXPLANATORY.

We learn from the person to whom allusion was made in the article in our last paper, relating to improvements on the Merrimack, that the purchase of land was made previous to the time he was professionally employed by the Company, and that he is not in any manner justly chargeable with misusing the confidence of the company. We regret the use of any language capable of being construed into an expression of personal disrespect to the gentleman referred to, because none such was intended.

ELECTIONS IN AUGUST. A number of important State elections are to come off in the month of August, involving the choice of 47 representatives, and (in Tennessee) 1 senator in Congress. They are as follows:

North Carolina, Aug.	7.	Legislature and 9 M. C.
Tennessee	7.	Gov. Leg. and 11
Kentucky	4.	Legislature and 10
Indiana	4.	" 10
Alabama	4.	" 7
Illinois	4.	"
Missouri	4.	"

These will complete the elections for the next, being the 29th Congress, in all States except Maryland (6) which vote in October, and Mississippi (4) in November. The States of Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, have 1 member each to elect to supply vacancies in the delegations.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—The influence and power of large corporations were probably never more strikingly manifested than during the hearing and pending the discussion before the Rail Road Committee the last winter, of the petition of the citizens of Danvers and others for Rail Road accommodation to Boston. It is well known and admitted by all, that they have not that accommodation which the increasing business and population of the town demands; and with a view to obtain such accommodation as would best promote their convenience and prosperity they were induced to look about early after the commencement of the session of the Legislature, for such a route as in the opinion of skilful engineers and the citizens generally, would secure to them the advantages desired. It was well understood that we must be accommodated either by connection with the Eastern Rail Road at Salem, or with the Maine Extension Road at some favorable point. The citizens of this town had no partiality in favor or prejudice against either of the roads, farther than as inconveniences and interruptions were to be avoided, or important advantages to be gained. An investigation was commenced and pursued so far as to convince every unprejudiced mind that a connection with the Maine Extension Road was greatly preferable; and this route was selected by the inhabitants of Danvers with entire unanimity; many of the influential citizens of Salem were favorable to the project; and a petition was immediately prepared, readily and numerously signed, and duly presented to the Legislature. Up to this time no person had probably dreamed that the citizens of Danvers could not select their own way and mode of going to Boston, provided they asked no greater privileges than had been freely granted to others. They did not expect to be told that the Eastern Rail Road had a claim to their patronage and support, but so it was; and the vested rights' notions were revived and put forth at once with a zeal and spirit of dictation which had never before been experienced in the Legislature of the free old commonwealth of Massachusetts. The Directors of the Eastern Rail Road immediately presented a remonstrance in which the following modest language was used:—"that the granting the prayer of the petitioners would be robbing one set of citizens for the benefit of another—it would be illegal, unjust, oppressive, dishonest, and sully the fair fame of the State of Massachusetts and brand it with a stigma worse than repudiation." Thus were the legislators of Massachusetts distinctly told, if they dare grant the request of the citizens of Danvers to travel to Boston at their own expense and in the way they preferred, that they would be guilty of injustice, oppression, dishonesty, and degrade the character of the State below those States who refuse to pay their honest debts. This language was not only used but placed in the seat of every member of the Legislature. When this bold manifesto was put forth, the petitioners began to learn the nature of vested rights and the true character of the opposition with which they would have to contend. And again, Mr. Webster in an argument at the hearing of another case in the presence of many members of the Legislature in the Hall of the House of Representatives, before the petitioners for the Danvers Road had been heard, stated that he had been requested to allude to the case, and he did allude to it most emphatically. This highly reprehensible attempt to prejudice the case in the minds of those who were to judge upon it, was considered by all impartial observers as unfair and ungenerous, but it is the proper result of high notions of vested rights. Once more the postponement of the hearing of the case from time to time and contrary to express arrangements, thereby delaying the report upon it to the very last hours of the sitting of the Legislature; the significant bearing of some of the Committee and the pointed questions put by them, convinced every candid observer of the proceedings before the Committee, of the controlling influence of the combined efforts of the great corporations; and it required no great sagacity to predict the fate of the petition.

It may be that the citizens of this commonwealth are ready to submit peaceably to the principles as put forth by the Rail Road Committee, and quietly surrender to the course of policy dictated by the interference of the principal R. Road corporations, that the good people of the Commonwealth shall have such farther Railroad accommodations as they shall choose and can control, and no other; but if it is so I am much mistaken in their character and feelings.

The citizens of Danvers have sustained with as much energy and zeal as any town in the Commonwealth the policy by which it has been governed, and have contended that the influence of corporations was beneficial, believing that their object was to give opportunity to persons of limited means to co-operate together and thereby contend successfully with men of wealth and influence—they have not believed it was intended to give exclusive right to any one corporation or class of men, but equal rights and privileges to all—they have never contended for monopolies never will, and in my humble opinion the legislators who sustained the policy promulgated by the Rail Road Committee of the last session of the legislator and which was upheld in an overbearing manner by the Eastern R. R. Corporation will find ere long that the people have inherited notions of liberty and equal privileges from their ancestors, and will maintain them with a determination which will be felt.

BALLOT BOX.

FOR THE COURIER.

NEW RAIL ROAD TO BOSTON.

Mr. Editor—Your very modest correspondent over the signature of "Common Sense," attempts to be very facetious in his essay upon the credit which should be attached to the opinions of ignorant correspondents, particularly to the opinions of those who in addition to their ignorance, are so obstinate, that they will not change their opinions with every freak of fancy. The gentleman thinks that such persons should "keep their notions to themselves," that it cannot be expected that they can appreciate "the disinterested and impartial view" which the Rail Road Committee of last winter "were enabled to take of the subject," and "their superior intelligence in comprehending at the first glance, all the points proper to be considered in relation to it." In regard to the keeping their notions to themselves, if they are so very ignorant and have common sense people near them to correct their statements, we do not see how there can be much danger of their "misleading others," and in regard to the latter part, I agree precisely with your correspondent that the disinterestedness and intelligence of the Committee cannot be appreciated by people who are consistent, and who are not in the habit of changing their minds. It is certainly a novel objection to be brought against the credit of an individual, that he is consistent and does not change his views often enough, but Common Sense seems to consider it a settled question that people who think it "a virtue" to adhere to a decision they may have formed, can know nothing of the science of Rail Roads. It is such a peculiar subject that it seems impossible a person can know anything about it until he has devoted perhaps years to its study, and in the mean time had his mind perfectly free to be biased and changed by every contradictory statement, and at the end of that time entertains different views from those with which he started.

In discoursing upon the superior disinterestedness and intelligence of the Rail Road Committee of last winter, Common Sense sagely remarks, "that some gentlemen who have made it their business to look into such questions as the expediency or propriety of the location of a Rail Road, will better understand the matter in one half hour, than others equally intelligent on other subjects, will in a whole year. Let any person attempt the study of the science of Rail Road operations, who has not heretofore given to it particular attention, and he will find after several weeks' application, that he knows much less than he supposed he did when he commenced." Now in regard to this remarkable intuition which Common Sense attributes to the Rail Road Committee, it was generally understood that they had not been engaged upon the Danvers Road question "one half hour" when they were enabled to see the whole bearings of the case, to anticipate all the evidence, and few doubted but that they had then come to a decision upon the question, but feared if they reported immediately, the ignorant petitioners might not be able to appreciate their superior discernment.—Common Sense speaks with so much familiarity upon the progress in the acquisition of the science of Rail Roads, that we must infer that he has advanced at least a few stages in the progression. Has he got so far that he can see in "half an hour" more than his neighbors can in a "year?" or has he studied it but "several weeks" and discovered he knows "less" about it "than he supposed he did when he commenced?" In charity I would hope the latter, as he certainly does not give much credit to a year's education in Rail Road science in his last week's effusion.

But what is it this "common sense" man has discovered in his scientific investigations? Why, that the right of the Danvers people to a charter for a Road, depends upon two contingencies:—

1st. Whether the public convenience requires it, which he denies;

2nd. Whether the stock will be taken up, which he with his usual modesty asserts cannot be, as the Eastern Road would so operate their road as to destroy the new one.

Now as to the first discovery. Some two thousand respectable citizens of different towns, last winter petitioned for a new road for their own convenience, and if this does not show that the public convenience demands it, will not the gentleman in his wisdom explain what public convenience is?

As to the second discovery that opposition should be made to a charter on the ground that the stock will not be taken up, although I may not be able to comprehend so much "in a year" as Common Sense in "one half hour," yet it appears to me that if it is true that the stock cannot be taken up, there is certainly no imminent danger in granting a charter. For the road will not build itself, nor can it be built unless the stock is taken up, so it is evidently the quickest way to dispose of the matter, to grant these ignorant petitioners their charter and let them find out themselves what Common Sense cannot beat into them—that the stock cannot be taken up.

Such are the two arguments the gentleman has produced, and the only two in his whole article. The remarks of Bassanio on the sophistry of Gratiano in the Merchant of Venice, will apply directly to the reasoning of Common Sense, when he says, "His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them they are not worth the search."

In regard to "personal inuendoes" it was farthest from my intention to make any, and I cannot now recal any statements to that effect. If Common Sense will particularize what portions he has reference to, I shall be happy to make all due explanations.

Your correspondent E. denies the truth of the inference drawn from his statements in a preceding communication, that the decision of the Senate, (not Legislature, because there is no doubt but the House would have acted differently,) settles the question of the Malden Road. Certainly any one to read the whole of the communication referred to, could not doubt but that it was written upon the hypothesis that the question of right was settled by the decision of the Senate, and the gentleman now makes the refined distinction, that it was settled right, but whether correct or not he leaves an open question.

He then takes the ground that the examination last winter was but the examination of one side of the question, and that as the principles of the opposers to the new road were then declared, and evidence adduced in favor of those principles, that it becomes those who denounce the doings of the Senate, to state fully their principles upon the subject, and show by evidence they are right. I agree with E. fully in his frank admission that the examination last winter was a one-sided one. The immense influence brought to bear, upon the side of the Eastern Rail Road—the array of counsel and the determined spirit to retain their monopoly manifested by that Road, was not met by the same force on the part of the Petitioners, for the reason that the Petitioners had not the ability to make such efforts, and were not apprised that any would be needed, until it was too late to do it effectually. I supposed that the grounds upon which a new road is asked, and the principles upon which it is demanded, were very well understood by the people of Danvers in particular, but as E. calls for an enumeration of them, I can give him such as occur to me, and upon which the petitioners founded their request for a charter last winter. The grounds upon which a new road is demanded, are, that the public convenience requires it—that many people have become dissatisfied with the accommodations on the Eastern Road—that that corporation until since the attempt made for a charter for the new road, entirely disregarded the wishes of the public—that supposing themselves safe in their monopoly, they exacted too high fares—that the Ferry is at all seasons of the year, particularly in the winter season, a great inconvenience and hindrance—that the Depot is situated at a distance from the centre of the city, and in a very incommodious place, so that it is frequently impossible to thread one's way to the city without being delayed and annoyed by the goods and trucks which constantly encumber the sidewalks; and in regard to the people of Danvers in particular, in addition to all these objections, they are without any direct Rail Road communication to Boston, and prefer when they do have such accommodation, to have it in the manner they may choose. These are some of the grounds upon which a new road is demanded.—That they are ample and sufficient the Petitioners never entertained doubts, and as to the principle upon which the new road is demanded, it is the simple and plain one that if the people of Danvers and the public generally, wish to go to Boston by another road than the Eastern Rail Road, they can have the privilege of so going. The petitioners ask the State for no pecuniary assistance in building the road. They ask for and expect no peculiar privileges incident to their charter. They ask, and only ask, that they may have the privilege, at their own expense, of constructing a Road to Boston for their own convenience and accommodation. And what is the objection brought against granting us the privileges we demand as of right? Why, they are, that the faith of the State is pledged to the Eastern Rail Road not to charter another which shall interfere with its profits. And where, and how long, has this principle been acknowledged in the State of Massachusetts? Since the Eastern Road was constructed, another road parallel to it, through the whole length of the State, has been chartered and notwithstanding the injustice of it, both roads are well supported, and the stock in both is above par. Thus instead of one with less accommodations, as we should have had under the "vested rights" notions, we have two, giving double the opportunity of investing capital, and amply rewarding all those who invested. As to the incidental rights legally to be inferred from a charter, that question was settled so far as the highest tribunal in the country could settle it, in the Charles River Bridge case, which is a case where there were not only inferred privileges, but expressed ones.

This "vested right" notion, E. himself allows as he cannot as a reasonable man deny, "is odious enough, and would stop improvement." But seeing that after all it is the only peg to hang an argument upon, he says that Railroads should receive "a reasonable protection" in return for the benefits they confer upon the public. Truly, and they have it. In addition to the privilege of going over the lands of the citizens, the rights of the Eastern Railroad Company are protected amply by the laws of the state. As a corporation for public benefit, the shield of the state is held up before it, and if a single right which it has in common with other similar corporations is infringed upon, the state will defend it. What else can it expect? But does E. mean by this protection what he with the same breath so plainly opposes, viz—that it should preclude the charter of another road, which may take away some of the travel of the old road. I cannot think the gentleman intends to convey a double meaning to his statements, but his ground upon this subject is certainly questionable, without further explanation. It cannot be that he means by protection to allow the truth of the vested right doctrine which he pronounces "odious enough."

In conclusion, I would ask E. if now that the Georgetown and Salem corporation have declined giving up their charter to the Eastern Railroad, it will not be better for the town to unite upon a new road, as proposed last winter? Will it not subserve the interests of the whole town equally? It cannot be expected now that the Branch will be constructed until a charter is obtained for it, and it strikes me that it should be a matter of serious consideration to take the course which will be for the interests of the whole town, and to take it unanimously.

DEATHS.

At New Mills Saturday Morn. July 26, Mr. William J. Wilson aged 21 years.

While we deeply mourn the death of our young friend, we have the consolation of knowing that he was prepared for that better and happier world to which he has now gone. About two years and a half since, he gave evidence of enjoying a lively hope of a glorious immortality beyond the tomb and of being prepared for an entrance into the mansions of bliss which Jesus has gone to prepare for those who obey him. He endured his distressing sickness with the patience, fortitude, and resignation of a Christian and expressed his happiness in view of "going home to dwell with Jesus." The word of God seemed to be a source of comfort to him both in health and sickness, and but a short time previous to his death, he spoke of it as affording him consolation even in the darkest hours, when sinking down into the grave its light shone brilliant upon his pathway, and brought Life and Immortality to light in the assurance of a glorious rest in heaven above.

See gentle Patience smile on pain,
She dying Hope revive again.
Hope wipes the tears from sorrow's eye,
While Faith points upward to the sky.

NEW ENGLAND

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 264, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. John Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads.—Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place, Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

THE

HAVING AWARDED TO

The Best Ready Made Clothing

Exhibited by them at the Mechanics' Fair in September last, must satisfy the community that the location of an establishment is of but little importance, and that the idea of being confined to a particular section of the city, in order to obtain a

GENTEEL GARMENT,

has been rendered obsolete, by the above named award, as without prejudice the award was made to those who deserved it. Being convinced themselves, that their CUSTOM WORK has not been surpassed in any point of view, still they have been obliged to stem the current against the strongest prejudices, and have, by unremitted attention to the tastes and desires of their patrons, to a very considerable extent, overcome them, resulting in a successful trade, and encouraging them to prosecute the NEW ENGLAND BRANCH OF THEIR BUSINESS, with renewed vigor, and to devote a large share of their attention the present season, to the

HARRISON'S REMEDY
FOR THE PILES.

THIS is an ointment prepared by the undersigned, and has been so thoroughly tested in so many different cases that I never hesitate to warrant relief to those who will give it a fair trial, observing the directions around each box which give a plain treatise on the disease and full instructions as to diet mode of cure, &c. One application at night never fails to relieve the greatest pain and anguish. I am ready to refer to numerous individuals who have proved this Remedy to be the safest, surest, speediest and cheapest

CURE FOR THE PILES.

My agent in Exeter writes thus: "the Pile Remedy which you left me is all sold, please send me soon a further supply, as a number of persons in this town think very highly of it. N. GILMAN"

MORE TESTIMONY.

Salem, Aug. 6. Mr. Harrison: The box of ointment which I had from you has worked like a charm—I have used it only one night, and I am cured. I had used Hays' Liniment as I stated to you, with no benefit but rather was worse, it causing more inflammation. Yrs, J. W.

BLEEDING PILES CURED.

Mr. Harrison—Having given your Peristaltic Lozenges and Pile Remedy a fair trial, I have the satisfaction to inform yon that they have operated wonderfully in my case. I had not been able for months to do any work at my trade, owing to exhaustion from bleeding, but I now feel myself cured. The severe pain which I had in my stomach is gone, and my strength is fast returning. I had used various remedies to no purpose, until I tried your medicine. I can also state that Capt. Benj. Ireson of this town has also experienced great benefit from your Remedy. I cheerfully recommend the medicine to all suffering with that distressing complaint—the Piles.

"OAK HALL!"

FOR SPRING TRADE!

OPENING OF "OAK HALL" FOR THREE MONTHS!

Advice to Professional Men, Merchants Clerks with moderate Salaries, Farmers, Mechanics, Seamen, Firemen and others, VISIT OAK HALL!

ARRIVAL OF SPRING GOODS!

To Wholesale Dealers.

THE OPENING

This Morning, for Three Months!

I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements. The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compensated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effect of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respectable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, having its dusty suit of nature soon to be warmed inanimation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green, So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next thing is to find a good place to fit out at a

REASONABLE PRICE,

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States:

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances.

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS

OR AS SOME SAY,

"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doing a

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for peopleo f all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetab les from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, thatof pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effectedby them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with full directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamation of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street, Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to directionf. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

DR. J. A. ROBINSON,

SURGEON DENTIST,

SALEM,

WOULD respectfully give notice that he has removed from his old stand, opposite the City Hall, to No. 20 Washington street, recently occupied by A. E. Phillips, where he is ready to perform all operation, in Dentistry, in a most thorough and workmanlike manner.

His experience and success in inserting whole sets either by atmospheric pressure or springs, enables him to furnish them at rates which cannot fail to suit those in want of an article of superior quality.

His method of inserting Teeth, both singly and on plate, with or without Gums, has been found to be satisfactory and successful as combining beauty of finish and adaptation, with all the requisites of mastication and articulation.

Particular attention paid to filling Teeth so as to render them serviceable for many years, and also to the regulation of Children's Teeth.

NEW LUMBER WHARF.

THE subscriber having taken the wharf, called the WEST wharf, near the Bridge, in South Salem would take this opportunity to inform his friends and the public generally, that he intends to keep for sale an assortment of BOARDS, JOIST, CLAPBOARDS, SHINGLES, PICKETS, LATHS, etc. etc., of as good quality as can be found in the city.

He has now on hand 300,000 dry Boards and Plank for sale, and all wishing to purchase, are respectfully invited to call and examne for themselves.

He has also made arrangements at the Eastward for furnishing Dimension Frames, and filling orders of every description, at short notice.

Having been a practical builder for the last fifteen years, the subscriber flatters himself that his knowledge of the business, and the Lumber trade generally, will enable him to give satisfaction to those who may favor him with their patronage.

As he will be at the Eastward part of the time, he will be able to give his personal attention to the purchasing of Lumber, etc. He has made arrangements with Mr. A. F. CLARK to be on the wharf during business hours, who will wait upon those who may favor him with a call.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints. Chilblains, Chapped Hands Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

LORRAINE'S PILLS.

All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, for do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's Vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and value.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 184

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. The fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them finds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have no time.

Yonrs respectfully,

J. E. F. MARSH

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 184

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills we have sold all we had last. They have given good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others. We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,

E. MASON

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 184

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtues of Lorraine's Pills, I had no faith whatever, but took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirely left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,

W. M. HALSTAD

Sir. I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent, all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

A severe pain, in both sides cured!!

LOWELL, Mass., April 20th 1944.

Sir,—For the last few months I have been afflicted with a severe pain in both sides, at times so hard that I could scarcely get my breath. * * * * * is a pleasure to feel well,—but a much greater one to say that I was cured immediately upon taking one dose of Dr. LORRAINE'S PILLS. J. BROOKS.

A hacking cough constantly annoyed me!

BOSTON, Mass., June 1st; 1844

Sir,—In February last, I took a sudden cold, after which a hacking cough constantly annoyed me, and this, combined with my other maladies, rendered me truly miserable, as everybody told me that I was in a consumption. Since, I have taken LORRAINE'S PILLS and now every body tells me that I am well;—I feel as well as ever I did. J. E. S. McKEY.

POETRY.

THE LAST GOOD-BYE.

BY ELIZA COOK.

FAREWELL! farewell! is often heard
From the lips of those who part;
'Tis a whispering tone; 'tis a gentle word,
But it comes not from the heart.
It may serve for a lover's closing lay,
To be sung 'neath a summer's sky;
But give to me the lips that say
The honest words, 'Good-bye!'

Adieu! adieu! may greet the ear
In the guise of courtly speech;
But when we leave the kind and dear,
'Tis not what the soul should teach.
Whene'er we grasp the hands of those
We would have forever nigh,
The flame of friendship burns and glows
In the warm frank words, 'Good-bye!'

The mother sending forth her child
To meet with cares and strife,
Breathes through her tears her doubts and fears,
For the loved one's future life.
No cold 'adieu,' no 'farewell' lives
Within her choking sigh;
But the deepest sigh of anguish gives
'God bless thee, boy! Good-bye!'

Go watch the pale and dying one,
When the glance has lost its beam—
When the brow is cold as the marble stone,
And the world a passing dream.
And the latest pressure of the hand,
The look of the closing eye,
Yield what the heart must understand,
A long and last 'Good-bye!'

SELECTED TALES.

LITTLE JANE JONES, OR FASHIONABLE LIFE,

A TALE OF "GOOD SOCIETY."

"I assure you, Mrs. Sanford, no one can rejoice more than I do in so truly republican an institution as the Lyceum. There is no exclusiveness about it. The poorest individual can go there and be instructed, and the fashionable and refined are not disgraced by the contact. It is expected that all will mix; and if I find myself placed by the fat wife of some mechanic, why, 'tis the Lyceum, and every body expects it. For my part I glory in our free institutions. By the way, what a splendid lecture we had on Thursday evening—deep, talented thing."

"What was the subject, Mrs. Wendell? I was not present."

"Well, really, I have forgotten; but I believe it was——philosophy, or history, or politics—after all, I think it was politics. The lecturer said that a free government was Christianity, or some such thing; and I believe it: for in what country is there so much religion as in ours? and we are of course the only free country. Liberty and equality! I am sure no people but Americans understand the words. How I wish that I could give all the world these blessings."

"It would be no worthless boon, I think, Mrs. Wendell; but are you quite sure that we are entirely free and wholly equal?"

"Well, we will waive that point, for I rather think it would be useless to discuss it. Did you hear the Rev. Mr. P.'s lecture, on Sabbath eve?',

"What, that horrible thing, full of infidelity and indecency? I hope not! I have heard enough of it, without hearing it. Our minister says that he thinks he ought to be set to hammering stone for the State, instead of being allowed to spread his heresies."

"That hardly sounds like a free country and free discussion, Mrs. Wendell."

"Mrs. Sanford, do you too uphold him in his dreadful doctrines? I hope you do not intend to turn ventriloquist."

"Transcendentalist, you mean, Mrs. Wendell; but I have endorsed no doctrine of Mr. P.'s yet, I was only inquiring; and I was thinking that if our country were really free, there might be free expression of opinions, even if they were erroneous."

"Surely, Mrs. Sanford, you would not have the people corrupted by error. Our minister says that freedom to teach falsehood is not liberty, but licentiousness."

"But Mrs. Wendell, who is to judge and decide what is truth—you or I, my party or yours? Has one man any more right to his opinion and the expression of it than another? If an opinion is hurtful let it be publicly expressed, that it may be publicly exposed and refuted. Secret foes are, of all enemies, the most dangerous. A fair field for all opinions, say I. Let them meet in open combat, and I have no fears for the truth."

"Well I shall not contest the point with you, Mrs. Sanford; but I think you would shrink from the consequence of our sentiments if they were carried out."

It is hardly probable that Mrs. Wendell had any very definite idea of the consequences that she so much deprecated. She had learned as any parrot could, the stereotyped rhodomontade of Americans about liberty and equality, and she was as liberal of it as a 4th of July oration. The practical exemplification of her principles we shall see, as her practice is exhibited.

The next time she met her friend Mrs. Sanford she was full of that beautiful charity which is the fruit of inordinate acquisitiveness, and can only be grown, as the southerners say, in our 'hard favored' Yankee land. The origin of this delectable charity in Mrs. Wendell was on this wise:—In the progress of liberty and equality she had found it necessary, in order to her introduction into good society, to purchase a velvet cloak,—in ladies' parlance, 'an elegant article,' 'a dear thing,' 'a perfect love,'—a velvet hat and feathers to match; price, (as it should be,) nameless; for we have no intention of awaking Mrs. Wendell's better half so effectually that it would take sundry curtain lectures to put him to sleep. This hat, feathers, cloak, et cetera, were all exceedingly democratic; so Mrs. W. assured her husband, for the Hon. Mr. ——'s lady wore just such. Farther, Mrs. Wendell's carpets were of the same pattern as those of her meek and self-denying pastor, Rev. Mr, ——, and the expense was only a trifle—about $200.—Mr. Wendell had also brought home a superb piano, price $300, for their two daughters to discourse most excellent music upon—albeit the eldest, Miss Martha, could never practise five minutes without yawning, and Miss Eliza played with an execution which effectually murdered all harmony. Now the sum of these expenses, with divers and suudry minor outlays which necessarily occur in every fashionable household, made Mr. Wendell discourse largely upon 'hard times,' a 'ruinous administration,' an 'unsound currency,' &c. &c. Of course Mrs. Wendell as a dutiful helpmeet, immediately set about planning retrenchment. She had two 'maids,' 'domestics,' 'servants,' or 'helps,' just as the fancy, the locality or democracy of my readers may make them choose to denominate those persons who sell their liberty and labor for so much a week or month.—Mrs. Wendell concluded to spare one of her domestics as a means of retrenchment, and 'take' an orphan child out of the Children's Friend Asylum. Biddy, the cook, was not to be spared. The housemaid might be supplied by a girl of 12, provided Martha and Eliza could be induced to take charge of their own rooms. Mrs. Wendell heroically determined to take charge of hers. Two dollars a week would thus be saved, and this she assured her husband would make quite a difference in his bills; and besides, the industry of his wife and daughters must encourage him: and moreover, the charity of taking a child and bringing her up in a well ordered family, would go far towards buying them a place in heaven. She always knew that she had an extraordinary talent for bringing up children: and she held that no one should bury their talents.

A few years after this conclusion to 'take' a child, Mrs. Wendell donned her splendid hat, feathers and cloak, and took her way to Mrs. Sanford's to talk of charity and economy.

"Now Mrs. Sanford," said she, "I have something to tell you that will delight your kind heart. You know that I wish to make myself useful, and I have at last hit upon a plan. I am on my way to the Asylum to take a child. I think it will be very pleasant to me and the girls to have an interesting object to bestow our care upon, and bring her up like a Christian; and then she can take Eliza's and Martha's cast off clothing; and then, ever since I heard Combe's Lectures, I have so wished to take a child and bring it up, on scientific principles. Will it not be delightful, Mrs. Sanford?

Mrs. Sanford said something of the responsibility of those who attempt the material and spiritual culture of immortal beings; but Mrs. Wendell had reflected upon that, had pondered it, and weighed it full two hours, and she was satisfied it would be a most praiseworthy charity.

'I shall go,' said she, as soon as I have selected a child, directly to Mr. Feeler and have its head examined, and then I shall know just what to do.' Mrs. Sanford had the good sense not to give advice where advice would neither be appreciated or accepted. If all the world were as wise much trouble might be saved.

Mrs. Wendell now took her way to the Asylum. Two kind-hearted maiden ladies, with philoprogenitiveness amply developed, presided over the band of little ones that a selfish and unselfish charity had gathered from lanes and alleys, and the squalid haunts of poverty. Little Jane Jones, as she was called, because she was so exceedingly slight and delicate that she looked as though she was a tiny rose bud, was a favorite with Miss Emily and Miss Ann, the care-takers. When I say that she was a favorite, I mean that they loved her with all the garnered affection of their hearts. Not that they loved others less but that they loved her more. Disguise or shun the fact as we will, woman must love with all her soul or she ceases to be woman. She may love an idea, or a cold-hearted, selfish man, or one who gives the deep, passionate love of a warm heart in return; or she may love a child, a lamb, or a lap dog, or a cat, or a bird, or some gold fishes; any, or all of these she may love, but love she must. Jane was the daughter of an orphan whose father was a clergyman. She inherited nothing but good moral principles, and a mind rich in varied capacity. She early married a sailor and moved to the city. Whilst her husband remained on shore, they were all the world to each other, and she made few acquaintances. He was obliged to leave her just before the birth of little Jane, and the poor creature grieved herself to death, and left her infant to the "Children's Friend Asylum." The child inherited the mother's beauty of mind and person. Few ever looked on her without loving her.—Great was the distress of the worthy maidens when Mrs. W. announced it as her intention to "take" Jane. She was one of the kindest patrons of the institution, for it was a popular charity. She was moreover a very pious lady, and Jane was past the age when the rules of the asylum required that she should go forth and earn her bread. Nothing was to be said, and no words could have told the misery into which the poor child and her friends were plunged. It was settled that she should go next day. That night Jane slept between her friends. She sobbed herself to sleep with each little hand clasped in those of the dear ladies. "O, Miss Ann," said she, "you will take care of my rabbits, and Miss Emily will see to my plants, and I may come often, and may be Saturday nights they will let me come and read to you. O, I can't go away and leave you with all the poor little ones to care for. Why can't I stay and be assistant? I will do any thing and every thing if you will only let me stay." The ladies reminded her that Mrs. Wendell was President of the Board of Directors. Resignation was alike a necessity and a duty. After an unquiet night the hour of parting came, and in due time Jane found herself in her new home.

Mrs Wendell's kitchen was a dark basement, one of those comfortless places that you can never warm with any amount of fire, and where light is unknown, save the dim twilight and the still more obscure light of one lamp, with very poor oil, for Mrs. Wendell prides herself on economy. Could her back door and her front door have been placed side by side, she would have died of the horrors, or a change would have been wrought with marvellous celerity in the lady or the premises. Some people say we should always look at and describe the beautiful, and never the ugly, if we would grow better and more beautiful. On this principle I must not glance at the back yard of an economist, where all manner of discordant rubbish is piled, that nothing may be lost, and that servants may have the benefit of all vile smells and exhalations. But, then, what are servants? They do not belong to us, unless we live at the South; what interest therefore can we have in their health or comfort?

Mrs. Wendell would far sooner have thought of owing Christian service to the Hottentots, than to her servants. Little Jane was immediately conducted to the kitchen, and her various duties enumerated by Mrs. Wendell. She was to attend the door, lay the tables and clean them, wash the dishes, scour the knives, rub plate, trim lamps, supply all the house with water, carry coals, make fires, bring water from the pump, help wash, and in short make herself useful. Mrs. Wendell also endeavored to impress on her the great favor she had done her in taking her out of the asylum.

The poor little creature was plunged in a kind of stupid reverie, or more properly speaking amaze by her sorrow in parting from her friends, and the prospect before her. Indeed, so great was her apparent stupidity, that Mrs. Wendell thought it was hardly expedient to pay a dollar to Mr. Feeler to learn her cranial developments; and moreover she thought it scarcely necessary to "bring a child up on scientific principles" who would have to work for her living in somebody's kitchen.—Finally, she concluded it was her religious duty not to give the child any ideas above her place —Three months' schooling in a year she must have, for that was 'in the bond.' But then the poor child never went to school three days in three months without a note to excuse her being late. Indeed Miss Martha scrawled them by the score, for the sake of having something to do, and having them ready. Biddy, the cook, was an Irish girl about thirty years of age, though of this fact she was not aware, not being able to remember her birth day. She was always at work when not asleep, hardly sitting down at her meals. She went the round of the kitchen as the horse or ox in the treadmill. She was not originally a bad tempered girl, but hard labor, with no comfort or convenience, no sympathy or companionship, had soured her pretty thoroughly, and she wore a 'horse shoe' ever in her forehead, and chased away the starving cat that sought a home and a morsel in the dreary kitchen, with a perseverance and vindictiveness that said, 'I will be alone.'—But after all, there is a key that unlocks all hearts; and though the confessor only had hitherto held the key of Biddy's heart, it was destined ere long to be given to another. The only care that Mrs. Wendell had ever taken for Biddy, was an earnest and premeditated attempt to convince her of the horrible sinfulness of confession and sin pardoning by the priest. 'Biddy,' said she, 'why do you tell that wicked man your sins and give him money to pardon them, when he is a mere man, and therefore cannot pardon, and also a very wicked man for pretending that he can?

'Father O'Donahue is no wicked man, mistress, and you just show ye know nothing at all of him, or the holy church. I never paid him for pardoning my sins. I give a bit to the church for its charities and its expenses, when I can, and you do the likes o'that when you pay for your pew, and shut yourselves up from God's poor and His colored children, and think you are too good to sit beside your servants in church.'

'Well, it is very well if you really give your money for something besides a pretended pardon,' said Mrs. Wendell.

'Father O'Donahue never pretends to pardon.—He looks to Almighty God to pardon us; and if we are sincere in our confession, we know that He will pardon us, through the priest's prayers and our own. And as to the confession, you'll never know the blessing it is to a poor lone crathur, till ye are all alone by yourself in some strange land, with never a heart-friend to lay your eyes on; and may be murmuring against Providence because o' your hard fortin'. When the likes o' that comes, it's a hard heart that doesn't turn to the priest. May be your religion is best for you, but ours is best for us, and Almighty God forgive me for wanting sometimes to curse them who would take it from us.'

This was the first and last conversation that Mrs. Wendell had with Biddy; and though she often expatiated upon the ignorance and wickedness of the Catholics, she made no further attempt, direct or indirect, to convert Biddy from the error of her ways.

When little Jane Jones was first taken to Mrs. Wendell's kitchen, Biddy's face was ominous of any thing but peace, and the poor child shrunk away from her as if she had been so me dreadful wild animal. And when she found herself in the little attic that Biddy occupied, her terror was increased. People who are disagreeable to each other ought always to have space. Contact makes repulsion doubly repulsive. Jane lay all night on the edge of the bedstead, and her grieved and troubled slumber disturbed the worn out domestic not a little. But crushed, and wronged, and wretched, as the poor Irish laborer almost always is, they have many of them a fund of cheerfulness and good humor, and Biddy had gleams of these. She possessed one quality too often lacking in the Irish. She was naturally neat, and though her abiding place, the kitchen, was a sad hole, she did all that could be done to make it sufferable. Her own little attic and all her clothes were kept so nice and sweet that it was a comfort to Jane to put it in order. Mrs. Wendell was an economist, and a thin apology for a bed, filled with chicken's feathers, was good enough for the servants; and truly it was much better, because more healthful, than the down in which the invalid Mrs. Wendell and her languid daughters found themselves sunk at night, weary because they were never tired.

Jane thought of her home and her kind friends with a full heart, but she prayed earnestly for resignation to a lot that she could not escape.—She gave herself with unwearied exertion to the fulfilment of all her duties. And Biddy, who at first regarded her as a new burden added to her already overwhelming load, began to find some rest, and to feel that she was a blessing. The second day after Jane came, when she went to put her room in order, she found that she had been anticipated by Jane, and she left the room muttering, 'the tidiest little creature. She's a jewel, she is.' Her Irish heart overflowed, and she sought the child to pour out her good feeling. 'Ye're a nice child, ye are; and 'tis Biddy hopes you'll have a bed in heaven.'

When Jane found that she could thus lighten the burden of one poor fellow creature, her intense desire to return home, yielded, in a great measure to the benevolent purposes of serving her fellow-sufferer. How sad to reflect on the state of such household as that of Mr. Wendell. The worn, and often half-phrenzied father, on whose single arm all this expressive family hung, looking to him not only for support, but for the means to minister to morbid cravings and thoughtless extravagance. The father stood behind his counter and daily and hourly sacrificed his honor and his conscience on the altar of gain. But let no man blame him till he has purified his own practice. "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."

Jane was now twelve years of age. She had a thirst for knowledge that it seemed impossible to slake. Her dear friends at the asylum directed her in her reading, though her time was so occupied that she was obliged to resort to the oddest expedients in order to gratify her taste for study. But Biddy loved to hear her read, for she said, 'if she could not always make out the meaning of the words, there was music in the darlint's voice.'

Time passed, and the sweet child at last blushed into womanhood. There was a strange contrast between her rosy cheek and rounded form, her free breath and elastic step as she carried water and coals, and the pale and sallow face, the angular and attenuated figure, the panting breath, and languid, drawling step of the daughters of opulence and idleness, Martha and Eliza Wendell. Their thoughts were of fine dresses, of parties, (not balls, for Mrs. Wendell was pious,) the lecture room and the church, as places of display, and the all absorbing theme to the vacant and idle, love and marriage. Not the true sentiment, or a true union, for of these they were not capable; but diseased sentimentality, and an establishment.

They had learned to keep Jane out of the room when they had company, but her rich, clear voice would sometimes intrude upon their ears, as she warbled the soul-stirring "I am bound for the land of Canaan,' when about her work. Faithfully did the conscientious girl serve in her prison home till she was 16 years of age. Then an incident occurred which determined her fate; and though in the progress of things Mrs. Wendell was somewhat mortified, yet she ultimately took great credit to herself. It happened that Mrs. Sanford had a son who had inherited his mother's wisdom and goodness. In his younger years he had learned the shoemaker's trade, but a desire for study coming to be indomitable, he had worked his way through college, and studied a profession, and was fast coming to be celebrated in a neighboring city. Mr. Wendell was one of the directors of the —— Institute. His managing wife and daughters wished much to have Charles Sanford lecture before that body, because he was a profound scholar, and because——they had too many reasons to enumerate, but perhaps they would have blushed had the true reason been given. Mr. Sanford had recently moved into the city, and they had never seen Charles. He was invited, and gladly accepted the invitation, for he was a loving son, and longed to see his parents and their new home.—Mrs. Wendell had been on a visit to the city of Sanford's adoption, and it so happened that both she and Sanford took passage in the stage coach, that, notwithstanding the railroad, picked up a sufficient number of passengers to continue on the route. A gentlemanly man, tall, elegant, with a faultless lavander vest, and a cloak of ample folds, took Mrs. Wendell's attention. Sanford intuitively read her character, and after an agreeable chat he mounted on the coach box, and told the driver that if the lady asked who he was to tell her 'a shoe maker from B.'

At the first stopping place he politely handed Mrs. W. out, and she graciously accepted his assistance, and made herself as agreeable as possible. But, as Sanford had foreseen, she contrived to ask the driver who the gentleman could be, and received the answer furnished by Charles. When, therefore, Sanford offered to put the lady in the coach, she drew herself up with great coldness and dignity, and signified her pleasure to help herself; and when he took an inside seat she allowed him to perceive that he was not only de trop, but a nuisance; and when he spoke of the pleasure of a travelling in a coach because you get acquainted with your neighbors, Mrs. Wendell sharply answered that it was hardly good fortune to be obliged to take up with any company, and sit by people who smelt so strong of their trade that it really made you sick. Sanford answered that he had great respect for the mechanic arts, and always loved the smell of leather. Mrs. W. turned from him with ineffable contempt, and did not again vouchsafe him the slightest notice, till he rose in the City Hall to give a lecture on the dignity of labor. THE RAILROAD QUESTION.

A correspondent in another column, takes exceptions to the views we expressed in our paper some weeks since upon the subject of Rail Road Charters. In regard to the statement that we have a right to a charter for a new road if we wish for one, our correspondent asks, how many persons it requires to express such a wish? We presume that one person could express the wish, or ten thousand; but that in the first case, the expression would be merely the wish of an individual and entitled to but little consideration, whereas in the second, it would be a public wish and entitled to a great deal. And if there are any in the towns through which the road would pass, who do not wish to have a road, their wishes are certainly entitled to consideration, and that in proportion to their comparative numbers.

In regard to the statement that Roads already constructed should not be considered in chartering subsequent ones, we merely put them upon the ground of all corporations for the public good.—We can see no just principle in giving them more privileges. We see but one step between this and the vested rights question which the gentleman opposes. If such road is to be considered, why should not the existence of one cotton factory in Salem, be considered in the application for a second? Why shall not one stage company corporation be considered in allowing a second or third? And what is more applicable, why should not previous turnpike corporations be considered in the chartering of Rail Roads which will take off all their profit? Railroad companies are defended in their rights by the laws of the State.

Our correspondent seems to think that such property is entitled to the same protection as other property, and we cannot see in what respect it is not or would not be on the ground we think it should be put. He will, we think, also see a very essential difference between county and rail roads. The one constructed from necessity and paid for by direct taxation; the other for convenience and profit, and built by voluntary associations.

We regret that our correspondent has seen fit to reflect on the course of our Representative from the north part of the town, as it seems uncalled for, and that gentleman acted fully in accordance with the instructions of his constituents.

A WANDERING JEW.

On Tuesday evening last, our attention was attracted to a crowd of people on the vacant lot at the corner of Foster street, who were attentively listening to a person who appeared to be addressing them on some religious subject. On a nearer approach we discovered him to be a man of the middle age of life, of a sallow complexion, in a plain dress and with a long black beard, and who, we were afterwards informed, was an Israelite converted to the Christian faith. He was evidently a man of more than ordinary ability, well versed in the Christian, as well as Jewish scriptures, and exhibiting no small degree of skill in his peculiar interpretation of their types and prophecies. He stated the number of his brethren scattered among the nations—a reproach and a by-word—to be 7,000,—that these constituted only two tribes and that the other ten were among those bearing the Christian name. He spoke of Jerusalem with the affection peculiar to his race when their thoughts are directed thither, and called it the 'beloved city, the 'holy city,' 'Salem, the city of peace.' At the conclusion of his address, he thanked his audience for their attention and announced his desire to address them again on Sunday afternoon next, at the same place at 5 1-2 o'clock. We should wish that a better Synagogue might be provided for him but we believe he prefers to preach in the open air.

It is interesting to look upon one of these children of Abraham, a race so widely scattered over the earth, yet maintaining a marked nationality of character, always looking for their temporal Messiah who is to be their king, and refusing to hold real estate, lest it should be an incumbrance in their expected preparation to return to their beloved Jerusalem. This singular race is of itself not only one of the strongest proofs of the truth of the Jewish scriptures, but it is a living fulfilment of the prophecies of the new testament.

THE METHODIST MEETING HOUSE.

We notice that the Methodist Society are about finishing the basement of their Church on Washington St., by which they will be accommodated with a convenient Vestry. We are glad to perceive these signs of improvement, and hope that society will enjoy under the ministry of Rev. Mr. Colver, their new pastor, a lasting prosperity.

SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

A public sale of building lots belonging to Col. Caleb Lowe, on Mason and Washington streets, took place on Monday last. The company present was large, and the bidding animated; resulting in the actual sale of all the lots (fourteen in number) at an average price of about $200,00 per lot.

INSTRUCTION IN GRAMMAR.

We have had the pleasure of examining, recently, an extensive apparatus, invented and used by Mr. J. Knowlton, in teaching the important branch of English Grammar. We think it a very ingenious and useful invention and would advise all who wish to obtain in a short time, a thorough knowledge of this science, to join the class which is about being formed, at the room in Lunt's new building.

MESMERIC REVELATIONS.

It is reported that a party of individuals in Lynn are about attempting to obtain pirate's treasures, by digging at the romantic spot known as "Tom Vial's Dungeon," which is situated not far from the Danvers line and about a mile from the Lynn Dye House. It is also said that these credulous people were directed to the precise spot, by a person while under the influence of Animal Magnetism, the clairvoyant assuring the listeners that a large quantity of the precious metals were buried there and still remain.

There is a singular tradition connected with this remarkable cave and it is still believed by many in that vicinity. The cave itself can now be explored about 50 or 60 feet from its entrance and the tradition affirms that there was formerly a room beyond this distance, which was many years ago the resort of bucaneers, and it was here they kept their treasures. It further states, that Tom Vial, a mysterious personage of that day was the confidant and assistant of the pirates, and to him their booty was entrusted for safe keeping. At a time when the Pirates were absent and while Tom was in the hey-day of his prosperity a great Earthquake happened, by which the earth was so shaken that the mouth of the inner room was closed and he was buried alive! It was this event which gave the name to the place and the cave has from time immemorial been known as "Tom Vial's Dungeon."

The Harpers have published another work by Miss Bremer, "The Parsonage of Mora, or life in Dalecarlia," translated by William Howitt. The scene is laid near the river Dahl, in Sweden, and embodies many of the sublime superstitions of the noble and hardy race that live in primitive simplicity among the mountains of Dalecarlia. It is a work of much interest, especially as it pictures to us the character of a people comparitively little known, and who have long been remarked for their resemblance to the New Englanders. They too, had their witchcraft delusion, a few years before ours, and the witches seem to have been as zealously persecuted as here. A very interesting sketch of the celebrated copper mines of Fahlun is given, and the tale is well worthy of the fame of Frederika Bremer.

Riot in Philadelphia. Another disgraceful riot occurred in Philadelphia, (Southwark district) on Friday of last week, which was occasioned by the withholding from two fire companies by the Commissioners of the district, their annual appropriation. Several arrests were made by the police, a large body of whom, together with the high sheriff were in attendance, and have succeeded in restoring quiet. The Commissioners have now resolved to cut off all connection with the firemen, and to give to the people of the district a fire establishment of their own.

☞We hear of strange doings in Salem, connected with the administration of justice in that city. If the transactions belonging to the Police department of the city of Peace, both as to arrests and trials were made public, they would not redound much to the credit and good moral character of all the magistrates of the place. We make no further remarks on this subject at present "for thereby hangs a tale."

The old "Constitution" and several other carriages passed our sanctum yesterday, loaded to their utmost capacity, with young men and smiling maidens, on their way to "Porter's Grove," to spend a few hours in social enjoyment. We regret very much that we were unable to accept an invitation to be present at this gathering.

Important if true. The Boston Atlas states that under the new English Tariff, American Boots and Shoes can be introduced into Great Britain and undersell the English articles in their own market. It is also said that the leather shipped to that country has paid a fair profit.—If this is true, a very extensive market is laid open for our staple manufacture.

☞We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisements of Geo. C. Varney & Co., in another column. They have recently erected a handsome and substantial brick store on the site of their former store which was burned down at the Great Fire in Salem.

THE OLD ALMS HOUSE.

We noticed on a recent visit to the north parish that this ancient building has been removed to one of the new streets in that town where it is to be devoted to some mechanical use. It was currently believed that when at its former location it harbored a large population not enumerated in the census. Great pains we understand were taken by the Overseers to prevent this class of subjects from emigrating to the new establishment, and we hope with success. These subjects not only obtained their living at the expense of the town, but at the expense of the town paupers themselves, whose very blood was nightly drawn to support this merciless loafer population.

The Newburyport Herald says, the aggregate valuation of that town, by the assessors, this year, is $3, 747, 400. Last year, it was $3, 284, 100, showing an increase of nearly half a million dollars since the last year. The rate of taxation is $7, 80 on the $1000, last year it was $8 on 1000.

The Bartlet Steam Mills Co. pay a tax the present year of $2730; James Steam Mills $1560; Essex Mill $516.

NATIVE AMERICANISM.

The editor of the Lowell Journal in noticing a recent meeting of the Native American party in that city, makes the following very just and sensible remarks:—

It is well to ask, what good will result from it, either political or moral? Nothing is more easy than to create a party by holding up one class of citizens as foreigners and Catholics, who are wishing to rule and debase the country. Nothing at the same time, can be more unjust and dangerous to the public peace, than this sweeping and indiscriminate abuse. Attempts were made last night, to connect the Irishmen of Lowell with the murders and church-burnings of Philadelphia. Prejudice was appealed to, in various ways. The foreigner was pointed out as one coming here to eat out the substance of the American mechanic and laborer. Every thing, indeed, calculated to arouse the worst passions of our nature, and beget animosities and stir up strife and bad blood, was said, almost, that could be said. If all the abuses and evils exist, which they asserted do exist, of what avail is the remedy which they propose?—It is like damming up Niagara with a straw.

☞Peter Flowery, Captain of the slaver Spitfire, has been sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the Salem jail, and a fine of $2000.

CHEAP TRAVELLING.

Now that the question appears to be settled for a while about the branch Rail Road, it may be well to consider whether the inhabitants of Danvers are not entitled to a cheaper mode of conveyance to and from Salem than now exists. I have no objection to having the present proprietors of the hourly coaches enjoy a prosperous business, but at the same time it is proper for the people to ask whether they are not paying more than others similarly situated for travelling the same distance. The usual rate now paid for all kinds of land carriage, is about 3 cts per mile, which is only half what is paid between Danvers and Salem, I only travel occasionally to Salem, but when I do, I have to pay 12 1-2 cts or buy 10 tickets by paying a dollar. It is believed by those who are good judges in such matters that it would pay well to run coaches to Salem at 6 cts, the same as is paid in the Roxbury and South Boston omnibusses. If this is too low, perhaps the public would be satisfied to pay 8 cts per transient passages, and buy tickets at 16 for a dollar. The extra business at the low rate would nearly pay for the deficiency of price and the people be better accommodated. I think the present proprietors have no right to complain of want of patronage and hope they will be ready to make the reduction suggested. As it is, it is the dearest travelling in this part of the country.

One of Many.

For the Courier

Mr. Editor—I have read the communications of your correspondents in relation to a Rail Road from Danvers to Boston, with much interest and cannot doubt that they all aim at the same object, though they may approach it in different directions. If they would limit their remarks to the subject, and have less of verbal criticism and personal allusion, their effusions would be more useful. It can be of very little consequence to your readers whether your correspondents are modest or conceited, obstinate or fickle, learned or unlearned, any farther than they give a reason for the faith that is in them.

The question is, how can the inhabitants of this town be best accommodated with Rail Road communication with Boston. The Eastern Railroad are ready to build a road from the tunnel through South Danvers and the New Mills to the Plains, and to run a train over it as often as they go to Boston, and to carry passengers and baggage at the same price, as from Salem. This they offer to do, because it will cost them but little to do this additional business, and in so doing they will save themselves from all competition. Can the people of Danvers ever expect to to go on terms more favorable? Suppose an independent road should be constructed, would not the natural consequence be a competition in prices, that would run down one or the other of the roads? In such a contest, can there be any question which would have to yield? It may be said that the people of Danvers have as good a right to select their own route of road as the people of Salem have, or the people of any other town; and that they are not to be debarred of this right by any collateral influences. Grant this to be true, still the question recurs, how can we really best obtain the accommodation that we want. Speculative theories are one thing, practical utility is another. Theories, without the means of reducing them to use, will only serve to embarass our enterprises.

Further, it is perfectly certain that the only way in which the Plains and New Mills may expect Railroad accommodation, will be by a Branch to the Eastern Railroad. If such Branch can be constructed through the South Parish, this will afford the accommodation needed to the whole town; but if this is not permitted, why should it not be made directly through North Salem to the New Mills and Plains; especially as it may ere long be desirable to connect the New City on the Merrimack with Salem in this direction? Should this city advance as Lowell did, and the county remain undivided, such connection would be indispensable. The time is not far distant when Railroads will be constructed between all our principal places of business, and we know of no route more probable to take place, than one from Salem through Danvers to Andover.

A. B.

Fatal Railroad Accidents. As the merchandize train was leaving the East Boston Depot about 2 o'clock, on Saturday afternoon, a lad named Davis, about 9 years of age, son of the Captain of the Ferry Boat, was run over and instantly killed. He was playing about the train and attempting to jump on to one of the cars when he slipped and fell, and the hindmost wheel passed over his head.

About 5 o'clock another terrible accident occurred at the Worcester Depot in Boston. The horses of the Worcester stage standing near the track as the locomotive passed, become restless, and backed upon the rails, when the engine struck the stage and upset it. Mr. Lewis Holmes, of East Weymouth, was thrown from the driver's seat and instantly killed, and it is said another gentleman had his legs badly crushed. One or two others passengers escaped unhurt.

The best Dividend yet. We learn that the Essex Steam Mill, in this town, yesterday made a dividend of forty two and a half per cent., the earnings of the mill the past year.—[Newb. Herald.

For the Courier.

Mr. Courier—Your correspondents seem to have taken up the Rail Road subject in good earnest, and I am pleased to see that the Editor is inclined to lend us his columns in the good work. In your last the remarks were all on one side of the question. Under the editorial head in your paper of July 26 you say "We think we have a right to a charter, if we wish for one." By this I should understand that the wish constitutes the right, and if so, the only enquiry is whether you wish it or not? How many persons does it require to express a wish that has such absolute authority over the General Court? Does this however apply to any particular Class of our citizens, and are the wishes of those who may wish not to have a Rail Road not to be considered at all? You say, "we regard the idea that Roads already constructed, should be considered in chartering subsequent Roads, as of most dangerous tendency, and would do all in your power to prevent the establishment of any precedent, which will favour it." This involves a very important principle, and if this view is correct I think the government has hitherto been in error in theory and practice. I have supposed that the interests of all our citizens were entitled to the fostering care and protection of the government, but if existing Rail Roads are not to be considered, it must follow that the immense property that is invested in Rail Road, is not to be noticed in the settlement of these great questions. This appears to me to be unreasonable and for better information I will ask why the effect of any measure of the government on this kind of property, should not be considered as well as its effects upon any other kinds of property. If all our Rail Roads were made by the state, the interests of the state would require that we should have no more Rail Roads than were necessary to accommodate the public travel, and that the business transportation should be done in the best manner, having reference to economy and safety; on the same principle that our county roads are made, which is, that the whole public will derive more benefit than it will cost the public to make the road. Now it is a fact that the people do make our Rail Roads, and the means to do it is drawn from all portions of our citizens the widow and the orphan, the mechanic and the laborer as well as the rich; all contribute to carry on these great improvements and at a very great expense, and are there any more roads wanted than if the state made them without the aid of corporations? I think not and if not why should not the government and the people unite in carrying on these improvements in the best and cheapest manner, and what is the danger of such a policy? Is there danger that the public will be accommodated at too little expense.

Your correspondent Truth has stated the principle on which the new road is asked, which of right is the principle on which it should be granted—and that is, if they wish for a new road, they should have it. As Truth says, "this is very simple and plain," and it would make the duty of the Legislature very "simple and plain" and save a vast deal of labor that is now expended in inquiring into the merits of petitions, and much of the time and expense of legislation would be saved, and very simple folks would do for senators as well as Representatives, at least as far as these petitions are concerned.

If I should say that Truth placed the whole merits of the question of a Branch to Malden on the improper action of the Senate last winter, I think I should have much better ground to support me than he has in saying "that any one to read my communication could not doubt that it was written on the hypothesis that the question of right was settled by the Senate." I urged the discussion of the merits of the question, in order that we might act in harmony, and I invite any one who may have the curiosity to see on what false ground the gentleman has based his long argument on this point, to examine my article in your paper of July 12.

Truth speaks of protecting the rights of Rail Road Corporations in common with other similar Corporations. Why not in common with the rights of the whole community? Why make any invidious distinction? I cannot see why the effect of any measure of the government upon this kind of property should not be considered as well as its effects upon any other kinds of property.—Would this be what Truth means by vested rights? I must confess I have not been able to learn what he means by vested rights.

Truth makes the inquiry whether it would not be better for the town to unite in favor of the Malden Branch, and whether it will not subserve the interests of the whole town equally. In reply, if Truth will show by good evidence, that we could build and support a road from North Danvers to Boston, by which our railroad business could be done at a reasonable rate, I think he would have no great difficulty in uniting the people of Danvers in favor of his views, but he is very cautious about touching this point and yet it is the most important part of the enquiry. If Truth is for the interest of the whole town, I hope he will furnish this evidence. As Truth has said so much about the improper influence of corporations over the treacherous senate, I am almost tempted to ask who it was that exerted such an extraordinary influence over the representative from North Danvers last spring by which he was led to oppose the Branch from Salem to North Danvers: this he did after he had heard the evidence before the committee and had stated to a member of his immediate constituents that the Branch to North Danvers was the best thing we could have and the only thing we should get, and if we did not get it then we might never get it. I think there must have been some extraordinary appliances to have induced this sudden change. Can Truth give as much evidence on this point as he can on the other matter?

Truth says the gentlemen now makes the refined distinction that it was settled right, but whether correctly or not he leaves an open question.—Friend Truth, is this fair? Please review it.

Truth says, I "take the ground that the examination last winter was but the examination of one side of the question." If there is any truth in this assertion. I should like to have him particularize what portions he has reference to, I shall be happy to make all due explanation; it will certainly need explaining, it will then be in season to notice the argument founded upon it.

Truth says "the objection brought against granting what we demand as of right, are that the faith of the state is pledged to the Eastern Rail Road not to charter another that should interfere with its profits." Who made this objection? I believe not the Eastern Rail Road Company or their counsel, and I think I have never heard any one make it. This would be the vested rights doctrine as I understand it? Will Truth please tell us who holds to this doctrine?

The Hon. S. G. Wright, Congressman elect from New Jersey, died at his residence in Allentown, on Wednesday inst.

The London Punch notices our countryman N. P. Willis in the following cutting paragraph. It will be recollected that Mr. Willis in his former visit to England was guilty of reporting private conversations as well as puffing authors, and was thus the occasion of raising ill blood among some of those whose hospitality he enjoyed.

To Authors about to Publish. Mr. N. P. Willis, the American author, has arrived in this country. We mention this fact for the benefit of those would-be literary gentlemen who are anxious to appear in print, as an invitation to Mr. Willis for dinner will be certain to secure them the advantages of publication, without any risk or expense. Literary gentlemen, are cautioned, however, against speaking too freely in their conversation after dinner, as mistakes have been known to occur in the best regulated memories—even in Mr. N. P. Willis's. For testimonials, apply to the editor of the Quarterly, or any one mentioned in Mr. Willis's American works, when he was in England.

A Fearful Tragedy.—The following is from the New York Sun of Wednesday morning: A deplorable occurrence at the country residence of one of our New York merchants, involving the happiness of three families and probably the lives of two persons, has been rumored for some days. We have been able to collect but few authentic particulars. The merchant recently returned from Europe, and on visiting his country residence, had his suspicions aroused that a friend was base and a wife unfaithful.—Finding them together he stabbed the guilty pair, and would have killed both instantly had he not fallen insensible at the moment of striking a second deadly blow at his wife. Both were seriously wounded, and the husband glorying in the belief that he had killed both, is now a raving maniac! The wife it is believed is not fatally wounded, but the recovery of her paramour, who is a merchant, is doubtful.—Both were stabbed in the region of the heart."

Another Tragical Wedding. The Louisville Courier gives some of the particulars of a most dreadful affair which happened in Washington county, Ia., on Thursday, 24th ult. In appears that a wedding party on their return home, after dark, were met in a piece of woods by a party intending to "charavari" the newly married couple. The serenaders by some sudden movement in the road, so frightened the horses of the wedding party that they became entirely unmanageable. They ran away, threw their riders, and the result was awful and terrible. The bride, bridesmaid and groomsman were killed, and so bruised and disfigured that their bodies could scarcely be recognised. There was much excitement in the neighborhood, and several of the serenaders were arrested and put in prison.

BRIGHTON MARKET—Monday, Aug 4, 1845.
[From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

At Market 1000 Beef Cattle, 3200 Sheep and 300 Swine. 100 Beef Cattle unsold.

Prices—Beef Cattle—Former prices were not sustained; we quote extra $ 5 25 a 5 37; first quality 5 25 a 5 37; second $4 25 a 4 75; third 3 50 a $ 4.

Sheep—Lambs from 1 33 to $ 2; old Sheep from 1 50 to 2 25.

Swine—Old Hogs at 4 1-4a 5c., Shoats to peddle 4 1-4 and 5 1-4. At retail from 5 to 6 1-2c.

SHAVINGS.

The Buffalo Flour Market has become perfectly stagnant. Flour was offered at $3,65, and wheat at 70 cents. The Buffalo Commercial, of Saturday, says flour is as low as it has been for a quarter of a century, and during the whole of that long period, it is questionable whether it has even been less a of merchantable commodity. Although prices have at various times ranged uncommonly low, there never has been so perfect a stagnation as at present.

☞A lease of the Charlestown Branch road for a term of years is proposed to be taken by the Fitchburg road, which will bring both roads under one direction, and give the Fitchburg a double track for five miles out.

Bricks. The ordinary price of bricks in Springfield is $4 per M; the Republican says a gentleman in that town recently contracted for enough to erect a large edifice, at that price, a part of them to be pressed. They were sold in Hartford last season for $3,50; and for this price teamed in from Windsor.

Ruins of the New York Fire. The Chief Engineer has discharged the men employed under his direction to search the ruins. The bodies of Mr Cowdrey and a Mr Groning are still missing. The probability is that they were blown to atoms, and the remains will doubtless never be discovered.

A State Convention of school teachers was held last week at Syracuse, N. Y. The attendance was large—31 counties being represented.

☞There was a great fire at St. John's, N. B., on the evening of the 29th July, destroying forty buildings. The total amount of property destroyed is estimated at about $300,000.

☞A singular spectacle is now said to exist at the whirlpool in Niagara river. The bodies of two men and two horses are now (says a correspondent of a Buffalo paper) to be seen from the bank above, passing around a circuit of a mile or more in circumference—each succeeding circuit drawing nearer the vortex of the whirlpool, until each in their turn become submerged beneath the boiling element again thrown with violence from its angry embrace to repeat its former evolutions.

Counterfeit.—Two dollar counterfeit bills of the Derry Bank of New Hampshire are in circulation. They are dated Nov. 2, 1842, payable to J. Jay. The large two and the words New Hampshire are bad. The signatures of the officers are poor.—Nashua Oasis.

☞The New York Recorder announces the expected return of Rev. Dr. Judson, Rev. Mr Abbott and Rev. Mr. Van. Husen, Baptist missionaries, on account of ill health. The two latter are on their way home.

☞The N. E. Puritan states that the dismissions, deaths and excommunications, from the Congregational churches of Massachusetts last year, exceeded the admissions by about four hundred.

Coarse Wool.—It costs just about as much to keep a sheep producing coarse wool, as it does to keep one of the finest variety, viz: 24 cents. The wool of the former is valueless, inasmuch as it will cost for fodder about as much as its wool will bring. Hence, there is no wool of the quality imported to this country at the five cents valuation, raised in this country. A yankee sheep would be ashamed to carry it about with him. Yet Locofoco papers have a great deal to say about the low duty upon coarse wool produced in this country! The gammon of such logic is too palpable to deceive any one, and only renders those who use it ridiculous.—Rochester Democrat.

The carpenters are now busily at work remodeling the seats of the Representatives' Hall in the State House, and making other improvements. The large golden eagle, which was formerly placed over the entrance door of the rotunda, has been elevated to a perch over the speakers' chair. He is to have a scroll in his beak, bearing the words, "God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."—Lowell Cour.

DEATHS.

In this town, suddenly, Aug. 3d, Ellen Maria, wife of Mr. Eben S. Poor, aged 19.

In the death of Mrs. Poor we are called to mourn the loss of one whom meekness, gentleness and humility had endeared to all who knew her. From her earliest years it might justly be said of her, "none knew her but to love her." About two years since she resolved to consecrate the dew of her youth to the service of her Saviour; and the beauty of holiness was added to the naturally amiable qualities of her heart, and diffused a heavenly fragrance around her character. A few months since we beheld her at the Hymenial altar—blooming with youth, love and hope—sealing her plighted vows to the object of her young heart's affection. Bright was their morning of promised happiness, and many were the hearts that greeted them with happy congratulations, and earnest wishes for its continuance. But alas! a few short months and the Destroyer came! and, as if envious of their blossoming hopes, suddenly severed those fond ties, and left her youthful companion stricken and desolate. A large circle of relatives and friends deeply feel the sad bereavement, but are sustained by the consolations imparted by her peaceful resignation, and triumphant Faith in the last conflict. [Com.

NEW STORE,

AND AN ENTIRE NEW STOCK OF

New and Cheap Goods.

GEORGE C. VARNEY & CO.,

HAVE great pleasure in informing their former patrons and the public generally, that having completed their NEW STORE, on the same site occupied by their old one, at

No. 13 Front Street, Salem.

they are now opening a full, complete, and well selected assortment of

WEST INDIA GOODS,

AND BEST

FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to dispose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a per centage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition to the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurances to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which and our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerous patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

THE

Massachusetts Mechanic Association

HAVING AWARDED TO

GOVE, LOCKE & CO.,

and no one else, a DIPLOMA for specimens of

The Best Ready Made Clothing

Exhibited by them at the Mechanics' Fair in September last, must satisfy the community that the location of an establisnment is of but little importance, and that the idea of being confined to a particular section of the city, in order to obtain a

GENTEEL GARMENT,

has been rendered obsolete, by the above named award, as without prejudice the award was made to those who deserved it. Being convinced themselves, that their CUSTOM WORK has not been surpassed in any point of view, still they have been obliged to stem the current against the strongest prejudices, and have, by unremitted attention to the tastes and desires of their patrons, to a very considerable extent, overcome them, resulting in a successful trade, and encouraging them to prosecute the NEW ENGLAND BRANCH OF THEIR BUSINESS, with renewed vigor, and to devote a large share of their attention the present season, to the

HARRISON'S REMEDY

FOR THE PILES.

THIS is an ointment prepared by the undersigned, and has been so thoroughly tested in so many different cases that I never hesitate to warrant relief to those who will give it a fair trial, observing the directions around each box which give a plain treatise on the disease and full instructions as to diet mode of cure, &c. One application at night never fails to relieve the greatest pain and anguish. I am ready to refer to numerous individuals who have proved this Remedy to be the safest, surest, speediest and cheapest

CURE FOR THE PILES.

My agent in Exeter writes thus: "the Pile Remedy which you left me is all sold, please send me soon a further supply, as a number of persons in this town think very highly of it. N. GILMAN"

MORE TESTIMONY.

Salem, Aug. 6. Mr. Harrison: The box of ointment which I had from you has worked like a charm—I have used it only one night, and I am cured. I had used Hays' Liniment as I stated to you, with no benefit but rather was worse, it causing more inflammation. Yrs, J. W.

BLEEDING PILES CURED.

Mr. Harrison—Having given your Peristaltic Lozenges and Pile Remedy a fair trial, I have the satisfaction to inform you that they have operated wonderfully in my case. I had not been able for months to do any work at my trade, owing to exhaustion from bleeding, but I now feel myself cured. The severe pain which I had in my stomach is gone, and my strength is fast returning. I had used various remedies to no purpose, until I tried your medicine. I can also state that Capt. Benj. Ireson of this town has also experienced great benefit from your Remedy. I cheerfully recommend the medicine to all suffering with that distressing complaint—the Piles.

Opening of Spring!

Magnificent, Chaste and Original Designs for Remodeling

"OAK HALL!"

FOR SPRING TRADE!

OPENING OF "OAK HALL" FOR THREE MONTHS!

Advice to Professional Men, Merchants Clerks with moderate Salaries, Farmers, Mechanics, Seamen, Firemen and others, VISIT OAK HALL!

ARRIVAL OF SPRING GOODS!

To Wholesale Dealers.

THE OPENING

This Morning, for Three Months!

I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements. The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compensated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effect of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respectable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, leaving its dusty suit of nature soon to be warmed inanimation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green. So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next thing is to find a good place to fit out at a

REASONABLE PRICE,

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States:

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances,

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS

OR AS SOME SAY,

"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doing a

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for peoples of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, that of pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with full directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamatiou of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street, Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creaturcs can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to directionf. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

NEW ENGLAND

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 264, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. John Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads.—Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull's Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

REMOVAL.

DR. J. A ROBINSON,

SURGEON DENTIST,

SALEM,

WOULD respectfully give notice that he has removed from his old stand, opposite the City Hall, to No 20 Washington street, recently occupied by A. E. Phillips, where he is ready to perform all operation, in Dentistry, in a most thorough and workmanlike manner.

His experience and success in inserting whole sets either by atmospheric pressure or springs, enables him to furnish them at rates which cannot fail to suit those in want of an article of superior quality.

His method of inserting Teeth, both singly and on plate, with or without Gums, has been found to be satisfactory and successful as combining beauty of finish and adaptation, with all the requisites of mastication and articulation.

Particular attention paid to filling Teeth so as to render them serviceable for many years, and also to the regulation of Children's Teeth.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

POETRY.

THE DEAD.

Oh! wrong not the dead,
Lest they rise in their might,
And terrors confound thee
In visions of night;
Lest thy soul be stricken
By horrors unseen;
For sure is the vengeance
Of spirits, I ween.

Then wrong not the dead,
And thy sleep shall be blest;
'Mid visions of beauty
Thy pillow be prest;
For blessings unnumbered
The dead can bestow,
Though their ashes be laid
The green valley below.

Then wrong not the dead,
And they'll guard thee from ill;
When dangers surround thee,
They'll watch o'er thee still;
They'll guard thee by night,
They'll guard thee by day
And all that would harm thee
Will banish away.

Oh! wrong not the dead,
For soon shalt thou be
Of the army untold,
Now mocked at by thee;
And strangers shall trample
Above thy cold grave,
Nor murmur a blessing
Thy spirit to save.

Then wrong not the dead,
And thy lot shall be peace,
Rich blessings on blessing
Each day shall increase;
The living shall love thee,
And make thy last bed
With the noble of earth,
If thou honor the dead.

NEVER GIVE UP!

Never give up! it is wiser and better
Always to hope, than once to despair;
Fling off the load of Doubt's cankering fetter,
And break the dark spell of tyrannical care:
Never give up! or the burthen may sink you—
Providence kindly has mingled the cup,
And in all trials or troubles, bethink you,
The watchword of life must be, Never give up!

Never give up! there are chances and changes
Helping the hopeful a hundred to one,
And, through the chaos, High Wisdom arranges
Ever success—if you'll only hops on:
Never give up! for the wisest is boldest,
Knowing that Providence mingles the cup,
And of all maxims the best, as the oldest,
Is the true watchword of Never give up!

Never give up! though the grape-shot may rattle,
Or the full thunder-cloud over you burst,
Stand like a rock, and the storm or the battle
Little shall harm you, though doing their worst:
Never give up! if adversity presses,
Providence wisely has mingled the cup,
And the best counsel, in all your distresses,
Is the stout watchword of Never give up!"

FOR THE COURIER.

DESCRIPTION OF A CANNIBAL FEAST AT THE FEJEE ISLANDS.

BY AN EYE WITNESS.

Mr. Editor. Finding myself in possession of a little spare time, I feel disposed to improve it in overhauling a range or two of memory, and agreeably to promise commit such of it to paper as may seem of interest touching on incidents which occurred at the Fejee Islands while on board the Old Ship Glide.

It was on a pleasant afternoon in the month of March, 1831., our ship at anchor off the Town of Bona-ra-ra, the crew on board employed in making sennett, spun-yarn, yard mats, and other ship gear to fill up the chinks of time, and particularly the ship's lockers with such articles as are sure to come in play on shipboard, when you have not time to make them.

We were not very busy, neither were we idle: but it was just one of those sort of days at the Fejees when all hands had been hard at work all the forenoon, boating off to the ship Beche-le-mar, weighing, and stowing it away in the hold, and having once more cleared up decks, felt released from the regular day's duty, and indulged ourselves in a sailor's privilege of telling tales singing songs and reflecting upon "better days gone by."

Our reveries and yarns were unbroken by any orders from aft except, to strike the bell every half hour, which if it had no other purpose reminded us that thirty minutes more had drifted astern upon the sea of time.

Five bells had been ordered from the quarter deck. I arose to execute the command, when my attention was drawn to the shore by seeing a large collection of Savages on the beach, walking towards the town. Having struck the bell, I proceeded to the side of the ship where a canoe with five or six woman had just arrived, to sell us fruit. I enquired of them what was the matter on shore. They immediately told me that the men had been to a fight with the Andre-gette tribe, (who lived about thirty miles in the mountains,) were victorious and had killed and taken three of their enemies, and were now going to have a grand Soleb, or feast.

I had heard David Whippy, a man who had long been a resident upon these Islands, tell many a long tale of the manners and customs of the Natives, and especially of their cannibalism, and I had a strong desire to see the manner in which they prepared and ate human flesh.

While I was considering whether I would ask the liberty I wished, or not, Capt. A. came up and stood in the companion way. I went aft made knownto him my request, when he replied "I have no objection but take care of yourself."

This admonition was gratefully received yet I felt by no means alarmed, having spent a great portion of my time on shore among the natives, with whom I was on terms of perfect friendship and good will, a circumstance well known to the Capt. or I should probably have received at once from him a denial of my wish to be absent from the Ship on such an occasion.

I went down to my chest and brought up a few beads, which I gave to the women in the canoe, telling them I wished to be paddled ashore.—They immediately threw their fruits consisting of a few cocoa nuts and plaintains, through one of the ship's portsupon deck and considering the beads a compensation for both fruit and passage I was soon on my way to the shore.

I landed upon the beach just ahead of the savages who were coming single file to the village, entering it however by a very circuitous route and in a manner never done except on such occasions.

There were about sixty warriors, though a great many others were in attendance who had joined them while nearing the village.

The bodies of the three dead savages were carried in front, lashed on long poles in a singular manner. They were bound with wythes by bringing the upper and lower part of the legs together and binding them to the body, and the arms in a similar manner by bringing the elbows to rest on the knees, and their hands tied upon each side of the neck. Their backs were confined to poles which were about twelve feet long one was lashed on each pole, with six men, three at each end to carry it.

Those who carried the bodies walked with a limping gait, bending their left knees almost to the ground, but doing it in exact time with the war song they were singing.

They proceeded immediately in front of the Boo-re (a large hut to be used only on public occasions) and threw the dead bodies from their shoulders with the most savage triumph. Two of them were untied from the poles while the third and smallest one, was by the order of the King sent to some particular friends of his belonging to a neighbouring tribe, from whom he had received similar tokens of friendship.

This was a great day at Bona-ra-ra. A day of great rejoicing. This tribe had not only been successful in their attack upon their enemy, but had succeeded in securing the slain. Little credit is given to the warrior who kills his enemies if he does not obtain their bodies; much more is thought of the savage who kills one man and carries him home, than of the individual who may kill a hundred and let their dead bodies fall into the hand of the enemy. Their chief glory consists not so much in killing, as in eating their enemies.

I noticed that a very particular interest was taken in one of the dead savages, and there were none present who talked louder or expressed more vehement gestures, or savage feeling, than an old woman. This matter I could not understand.—I asked a young savage who stood near me, what was their particular interest in that man more than theother? He told me that some time previous this tribe had made war with the Andre-getta people, and the son of this old woman was a young Chief in the fight and was slain: and it was believed that this individual had killed him.—Whether it was so or not, the old woman believed it and the priestbelieved it, and that was enough for their purpose, for they only wished to wreak their revenge on some savage, though it were a dead one. I had seated myself on the large roots of a cocoa nut tree in front of the whole ceremony.—After it was satisfactorily settled that this was the savage who had killed the young chief, they proceeded systematically to fill up the measure of their revenge.

This old female savage went to her hut and brought all the property of her late son; such as sleeping mats, taffa, i-fow carlic, angona-dish, and some other little furniture which make up the necessaries of a chief's dwelling. The angona bowl was placed near the head the of dead savage; a bamboo of water was brought and laid by his side, when several young men after well rinsing their mouths, were employed in chewing and preparing a bowl of angona. After the drink was made ready this old savage after a short speech from the priest who had continued to make low gutteral sounds and shake himself through the whole ceremony took her small dish full of the liquor and presenting it to the lips of the dead savage bade him drink. No sooner was this done than a general yell ran through the tribe—Amba cula boy thu-ie, he is a stinking dead man. She then dashed the liquor in his face and broke the dish in peices upon it. She then took up her bamboo of water, and removing the tuft of grass from the end placed it also to the mouth of the dead man and again bade him drink. A repetition of the same ceremony was gone through with, when she poured all the water upon his face and then broke the bamboo in peices upon his head, and told the men to take it to cut him up with. Bamboo, split to a sharp edge was called by them isulic, (a term applied to knife) which instrument alone they allowed themselves to use in cutting to pieces a dead body.

The old woman had now gone her way knowing, that her orders would be executed, and well aware of the strict prohibition against her, or any of her sex either to assist in preparing, or eating human flesh.

The head of the savage on whom this ceremony commenced was first cut off and laid aside, then the furniture that was brought by the old woman was broken up and placed around it; and fire set to it so that the whole was entirely consumed about the head, and rendered thereby in a fit state for cleansing; the hair being burnt off and the flesh so singed that it was scraped perfectly white.

As soon as this affair was ended a dance commenced as is customary on all such occasions.—All the warriors who were engaged in the fight, and some aged men who staid at home, had now prepared themselves for this savage expression of joy. The Fejeeians wear but little clothing on ordinary occasions, and on this they were in a state of complete nudity. They were painted in a most frightful manner, as great a diversity of painting, or marking was observed by them as could be devised, each one attempting to outdo the other in the most loathsome obscenity and savage appearance. They use but three kinds of paint upon their bodies which are black, red, and yellow. The black is made from a small nut which grows upon the ground, it is burnt to a coal and pounded up between flat stones, and prepared by mixing it with Cocoa Nut Oil. The red and yellow paint used by them is a mineral similar to our ochre, if not precisely the same in substance. The yellow is held by them in high estimation. It is mixed with cocoa nut oil, scented with sandle wood and fragrant herbs, and is the first dressing received by the newborn infant. It is called by them re-ringer.

There were about one hundred dancers who came upon the ground at one and the same time with terific yells. Their dance was made up of the most violent and disended motion of the limbs, often prostrating themselves on the ground upon their backs, and springing again instantly to their places, without however for a moment ceasing to chant their war song in a very low but distinct manner. Their only instrumental music on this occasion was that of two savages beating upon the end of a hollow log four or six feet in length, which is always heard on such occasions, and also as an alarm for war.

Within the ring of dancers had the old woman's command been promptly executed.

They commenced in their usual systematic way of cutting up a dead body. The heads of both savages being now taken off, they next cut off the right hand and left foot, right elbow and left knee, and so in like manner until all the limbs separated from the body.

An oblong piece was then taken from the body commencing at the bottom of the chest and passing downwards about eight inches, and three or four inches wide at its broadest part. This was carefully laid aside for the King, it being strictly prohibited for any one else to eat of it.

The entrails and vitals were then taken out and cleansed for cooking. But I shall not here particularize. The scene is too revolting. The flesh was then cut through the ribs to the spine of the back which was broken, thus the body was separated into two pieces. This was truly a sickening sight. I saw after they had cut through the ribs of the stoutest man, a savage jump upon the back, one end of which rested upon the ground, and the other was held in the hands and rested upon the knees of another savage, three times before he succeeded in breaking it.

This ended the dissection of the bodies.

While this was going on, the lobu or oven was prepared which was made as follows. An excavation is made in the earth of a concave, form about six feet in diameter and a foot and a half deep in the centre, and smoothly lined with small stones. A large fire is then made in it, with small stones placed among the burning fuel for the purpose of heating them, and as the bodies are cut to pieces they are thrown upon the fire, which after being thoroughly singed are scraped while hot by savages, who sit around the fire for this purpose.—The skin by this process is made perfectly white this being the manner in which they dress their hogs, and other animal food.

To show their excessive greediness for human flesh, and their savage thirst for blood, I need only to relate a particular circumstance which took place at this time. The head of the savage which was last taken off, was thrown towards the fire, and being thrown some distance it rolled a few feet from the men who were employed around it; when it was stolen by one of the savages who carried it behind the tree where I was sitting.—He took the head in his cap and after combing away the hair from the top of it with his fingers picked out the pieces of the scull which was broken by the war club and commenced eating the brains. This was too much for me. I moved my position, the thief was discovered and was as soon compelled to give up his booty, it being considered by the others he had got by far too great a share.

The process of cleansing and preparing this flesh, occupied about two hours. There was no part of these bodies which I did not see cleansed and put in the oven.

The stones which had been placed upon the fire, were now removed, the oven cleaned out, the flesh carefully and very neatly wrapped in fresh plaintain leaves, and placed in it. The hot stones were also wrapped in leaves and placed among the flesh, and after it was all deposited in the oven, it was covered up two or three inches with the same kind of leaves, and the whole covered up with earth of sufficient depth to retain the heat.

It was now about sunset: the oven was completely covered, and a new dance commenced around it, which continued for some time. I ascertained by the natives, that it would be past midnight before they would open their oven, and being desirous of seeing the end of this affair, and recollecting that I had no anchor watch to stand that night, I resolved to go to the Beche-le-mar house which was on the opposite side of the village, and spend part of the night, caring only to get on board the Ship (the next morning in season to turn to with all hands, in washing the decks. I therefore proceeded on my way across the village, when I met with Si-na-beatee, a chief with whom I was well acquainted, who asked me to go with him to his hut, and take something to eat.—I followed my host to his cabin, and made a good supper, after which I left him and renewed my way across the village to the Ship's house.

I found the men curing the fish as usual. Every thing looked perfectly familiar to me. Some were scolding the natives for their laziness and not bringing the fish to the pots, as they wanted them; others were dodging the smoke and steam from the pots, with an occasional oath, and trying to get a snuff at pure air; while the men to the windward pots, though free from the other annoyances, were compelled to take a double share of musquitoes, which was a fair offset to the grievances of the others. These, with a few of Job's comforts; dreadful sores occasioned by frequently burning a poison wood called by the Natives—see-nu, make up some of the rare pleasures of the shore's crew on a Beche-le-mar voyage.

As the men on shore are obliged to stand watch, and watch, I turned in to the berth of one of my ship-mates who had the first watch at the pots, and slept as sound and as well, perhaps, as any one else would have done in a savage land with a host of savage musquitoes singing about his ears.

I turned out about midnight, sauntered about the Beche-le-mar house until nearly daylight, and then made my way back again to the Boore.

I soon found on nearing the house, by seeing the torches about the oven, and also by the scent of their cooked flesh, that their feast had begun; and on my arrival I found they had nearly done. It was soon reported to the Chiefs that a white man was at the door, and after some enquiry I was invited to the feast. Being well acquainted with the King, as well as Sina-beatie with whom I had supped the evening previous, I felt somewhat at home and took a seat beside the last named personage. It was not yet daylight and there was no light in the house except a small fire kept burning at each of the three doors to keep out the musquitoes, which served for little or no other purpose. I had been seated but a moment or two when I heard the Chief Sina-beatie (who was kept on board the ship as a hostage for the men on shore who were getting a cargo for the Ship, but who had been released by the Captain on this occasion the evening previous) say to the King, 'Had we not better give the white man something to eat?' 'Yes,' said the King, you can send and get him some yam, for he will not eat our meat. Sina-beatie replied, I know he will not, but I consider the meat by far the best and as a token of good will, having received presents from him, I wish to present him some. The King, after a mute silence of a moment, told one of his ki-sees or slaves to give the white chief (allowing me that title in consideration of the respect shown me by Sina-beatie) the best piece which was left, it being nearly all eaten up. He went to the centre of the Boo-re where lay some unbroken bunches of meat, the savages being placed generally on the sides of the room, and selected a piece, telling the King what it was, before removing it. The King said it was "slave's meat," which he regretted, saying to Sina-beatie, he wished it was a better piece and ordered the slave to give it me. It was accordingly brought, carefully wrapped in a plaintain leaf as it had been placed in the oven. I unwrapped it and found it to be a part of a foot taken off at the ankle and at the joints of the toes. I made an excuse for not eating it, by saying that it had been kept too long after it was killed, before it was cooked, it being about thirty-six hours. The King replied, it was not half so long as you white men keep your bullum-a-cow! meaning salt beef, a name derived from bull and cow, by American seamen. Salted meat was considered by them the most unhealthy and loathsome food that could be eaten, and was the means of creating a strong prejudice against the whites for their eating it. I had no desire to discuss the question of diet with this old savage and cannibal, knowing that I could not convince him of the base impropriety of eating human flesh. and well aware that he could not prevail on me to exchange the cured flesh of a well stalled ox for the jackall food of his murdered victims.

As the light of day shone into the hut, it revealed a sight seldom witnessed by civilized man.—Around the hut sat sixty or seventy cannibals, more frightful than ever if possible; their paint being rubbed together in many instances, gave their bodies such an appearance as for a moment to lead one to doubt that they were human beings.—Before one savage, would lay a human head, save that part which could be released from it, the lower jaw; which would be in possession of another. The bones of these bodies were well distributed among them, showing conclusively that none had failed to get their share. I had understood by them that the oven was opened about midnight, and that they had now done their feast; what was left was to be given to the boys; the women, as I have before stated, were not allowed to taste of it though they frequently got it by stealth, as some of them did on this occasion after the bones and broken meat was given to the boys. My attention was directed to an old Ton ga ta boo savage, whom I had seen however, frequently before, who was a Ma-ti or mechanic among them, whose particular business it was to manufacture sail needles from the shin bones of their cannibal victims. The sails to their canoes, being made in a triangular form, of thick mats sewed together with sennet, renders it necessary to have long and crooked needles, and perhaps there is nothing among them from which this article could be so well manufactured as from the shin bone of a man. This old savage sat near the King, with four shin bones between his own, and feeling himself entitled by his peculiar occupation to those parts of the victim, never failed to have his share of the spoils. I had heard through my whole stay at this place that he was the most notorious cannibal in the tribe; and his whole appearance conformed well with his acknowledged character. He was of a large and muscular frame, raw boned, his skin brawny and dry, and with no nose upon his face; he having lost this prominent feature some years previous, for the indulgence of a crime among the wives of a neighboring chief. His nose was bitten off. I knew of but one crime among these Islanders, which a man or woman could commit, the penalty of which was the loss of this member.

Many of the savages now began to leave the Boo-re, and among the rest was Sina-beatie who stated to me that he should go on board the Ship in the boats which came on shore for the beche-le-mar. I rose to go, but wishing to carry with me some relic as a remembrance of the scene I had witnessed, I engaged the old Tonga savage to make a pair of sail needles, one from the limb of each of the devoured victims, promising him a good compensation for them. He gave them to me in two or three days after, neatly wrou which I placed among my numberless curiosit which within one month from that time were lost together with the ill-fated Ship.

About sunrise, I went to the Beche-le-m house, and finding myself too late to get on bo to assist in washing decks, I set myself to w collecting the Beche-le-mar on the batters, in re iness to be put into bags when the boats came thereby offsetting my duty on board by do what I knew would be required of my boatma on their arrival on shore.

The boats arrived at their usual time, and a taking on board as much of the Beche-le-mar was ready for storage on board the Ship, we w on board accompanied by Sina-beatie and his w Tu cun-na, who spent much of her time with chief on board of the Ship.

I am about to the end of my yarn, yet I mi lengthen it by knotting on other strands, but time piece reminds me that it is past midnig so I shall take the liberty to belay this and turn

Yours, &c..

New Mills, August, 1845. F

THE MAYNOOTH GRANT.—Since the agitation Sir Robert Peel's ministerial plan of increas the endowments of Maynooth, the question is quently asked "What is Maynooth?" It may answered concisely in the words of the Lon Christian Examiner:

The College of Maynooth derives its name fr the small town in which it is located, about leven miles distant from the Irish metropolis, adjoining the magnificent seat of "Ireland's duke"—the Duke of Loinster. At this plac house for the intended college was purchased the sum of £4,012 10s. and fifty-four acres land were granted by the late Duke of Leins on a lease of lives renewable forever, at the an rent of £74. Twenty acres of land were sequently obtained from Mr. Stoyle, at an ann rent of £140.

The Rev. Dr. Hussey, formerly chaplain to Marquis del Campo, the Spanish Ambassa and afterwards tutelar Bishop of Waterford, appointed first President of the institution. F students were admitted in 1795; fifty mor 1800; in 1809 they amounted to two hundred 1812, to two hundred and fifty, and at present number approaches to five hundred. The s erior, professors, and all the students, reside wit the walls; and the college buildings, wanting architectural embellishments, form three side a quadrangle, containing a chapel, a refrect a library, and various lecture rooms. The t cost of these erections is understood to have b £11,913 3s. 1 1-2d. The annual grant from liament provides for the support of the presid vice president, deans, librarian, purser, fessors, and about two hundred and seventy dents. The present endowments are nine t sand pounds, which Sir Robert proposes t crease to twenty-six thousand per annum. College of Maynooth is strictly a sectarian It was established by Roman Catholics, for education of Priests.

NOTHING LIKE DISCUSSION.—Among the dence that C. M. Clay's True American is ex ing a strong influence in Kentucky, is the fact other papers opposed to his course are under necessity of answering his arguments, and aiding to produce that wholesome moral agita which will be sure to result in the triumph of erty over Slavery. If we were in a Slave S we should draw great encouragement from sign of the times, believing with a very sha observer, that Slavery is an institution in every so bad that it matters little what people say ab it if they will only keep talking. It is only in atmosphere of silence and stagnation that friend of Slavery can hope to perpetuate its istence.—N. Y. Tribune.

Crops in Connecticut.—As far as we can lea from our farmers, the crops will, in this p of New London County, be about equal to th of any previous year—although the quantity hay cut will be hardly an average crop. Gra rye and oats, we are told, will come in ve well; and of corn, there will be about an a rage yield. These facts are the more grati ing, as the indications, in the months of M and June were decidedly unfavoable to growth of any of those articles; and many telligent farmers prophesied that the year wou be unpropitious throughout.

Of fruit, there is an abundance of most kin We hear nothing yet, however, of the ap crop; but, of pears and peaches, there w be a large supply.

Hon John Davis, of Worcester, as we lea from the Journal of the American Temperan Union, has been appointed by the governor a council, to aid in defending the constitutiona ty of the Massachusetts license law, before t U. S. Supreme Court at Washington, ne winter.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, AUGUST 16, 1845.

THE MONEY DIGGERS.

We mentioned in our last, that some individuals in Lynn, had been led by the declarations of a mesmerized subject, to search for money at a place called Tom Vial's Dungeon. The place is more familiarly known as "Dungeon Rock," and there can be no doubt but at some period the cave was inhabited, as all the traditions agree in this fact, although they differ widely as to names, dates and other circumstances. We mentioned in our account of it, that a portion of the interior of the cave was closed by an earthquake many years ago, thus shutting up all the treasure and its keeper. We made a visit to this wild and romantic region, in the early part of the week, and found that the laborers had blasted the rock and removed a considerable portion of it directly over the spot where they expect the money is deposited.—We here learned that about a dozen years ago, an attempt was made to throw off a large fragment of the rock, with powder, which was partially successful, but it entirely changed the appearance of the cave. It now presents the appearance of a shelving rock, under which 20 persons can be conveniently seated, only part of the space being high enough to stand upright. This unfortunate blast deprived the place of much of its romantic character, as it closed the access to a portion of the cave. We farther learned that the money diggers had not only the testimony of the mesmerized subject in Lynn, but that her account was confirmed by another clairvoyant at the South, who agreed with the first in everything but the discovery of three skeletons with the treasure, while the other only saw but one. We learn from the Lynn Whig, that an axe supposed to have once belonged to the hermit of the cave, has recently been found.

Those who have read the little pamphlet just issued by Messrs Kimball & Butterfield of the Essex County Whig, will be interested to know that the revelations there described were made by the same clairvoyant who first directed attention to Dungeon Rock. With regard to the question, "Is it true?" on the title-page of this pamphlet, a New York paper cruelly intimates that the whole thing originated in a land speculation:—that a man wished to sell an unprofitable farm, and taking advantage of some old tradition about Capt. Kidd's having once landed there, procured two or three old cannon, and other ancient implements, and sunk them in the river near his landing; the discovery of which revived the old traditions which thus became facts, especially when confirmed by the clairvoyant's declarations.

In this affair at Lynn, there can be no such motive, as the land where the rock is situated, belongs to the town. As to the revelations of the clairvoyant, they may be accounted for if we suppose, as many believers in Mesmerism do, that the subject operated upon only reflects back in an imperfect manner what is at the time passing in the mind of the person in communication. In addition to this testimony, the present adventurers rely on a well authenticated tradition that at a remote period, two or three boats landed near Saugus from a piratical craft, and concealed their booty in the woods; that the occupant of the cave was known to have and spend hard money, and that he was seen immediately before, but never after the earthquake. It is on such slender grounds as these, that credulous individuals are induced to spend their time and money in blasting a flinty rock, which in its turn is destined to blast all their fond anticipations.

☞The communication of A. in relation to the Railroad question, will appear in our next.

☞We learn that the Unitarian Society are to have a Pic-nic on Wednesday next, at Spring pond. Rev. Mr. Sargent, who is engaged to supply the pulpit for the ensuing six months, resides at the Hotel, and will be present at the meeting, which will no doubt be one of great interest. May all their pleasurable anticipations be fully realized.

We have received from Dr. Joseph Shed, a bottle of Ink, of his own manufacture which we find upon trial to be a good article.

Henry M. Paine, of Oxford, is making quite an excitement in the papers, on account of some marvellous attempts upon his life. He is the gentleman who favors the public occasionally with accounts of some wonderful microscope, telescope, or something of that sort, of his construction. The existence of any bona fide assassin in the present instance, seems to be considered as hypothetical as that of his extraordinary instruments. What the gentleman will treat us to next, we would not dare to guess.

RATTLESNAKES.

We are informed by Gen. Foster, that six large rattle-snakes have been killed in his neighborhood, during the past summer. Two were killed some two months since, by two women who were in the pastures picking berries. One having twelve rattles, was killed last Wednesday, by Mr. J. Harrod. But the largest was killed last week, by Mr. Wm. Very, which on opening, was found to contain eighty young rattlesnakes, alive!! When Mr. Very first saw the snake, the young ones were all out, playing around her, but upon notice of his approach, the old snake opened her mouth, and the young all ran down her throat. We have not the slightest reason to doubt the truth of this, although it surpasses many of the manufactured snake stories.

FIREMENS PIC-NIC.

It will be seen by notice in another column that the Firemen and Ex-Firemen are to have a rural entertainment at Porter's Grove on Thursday next We learn that preparations are in progress to make this festival one of the most attractive of its kind, and the tickets are going off rapidly.—The Salem Brass Band is engaged and its charming music in that beautiful grove, will of itself be worth the price of the ticket. The Ladies will contribute their good things for the tables, and several amateur cooks will prepare a chowder for 1200 persons as good as could be provided by the Sage of Marshfield himself. There will be a great gathering and we anticipate a glorious Festival.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

The monument Division of the S. of T. held a meeting at the Universalist Church, on Thursday evening last, to hear an address from Edmund Burke Esq., G. S. S. T. It was a public meeting, and the members of the order appeared in full regalia. The address was sound and iustructive, and was well received by a respectable and very attentive audience.

New Omnibus.—We understand that Messrs. Symonds & Teel will soon add a new omnibus to their present excellent stock of coaches, capable of seating sixteen inside. May they receive encouragement commensurate with their efforts to please and accommodate.

The Trial of Henry G. Green, for the Murder of his Wife, in the town of Bern, in February last, has been published in a convenient pamphlet form, and is for sale by Mr. Luther Chandlee.

THE NEW POSTAGE BILL.

We saw a few days since, a letter mailed in the interior of Ohio, in which was enclosed a sample of Sole Leather, sent to one of our shoe manufactureres, with an offer to furnish him with any quantity of the article, at a stipulated price. The postage on this letter was 10 cts.

The above fact is gratifying so far as it relates to the public accommodation afforded by the new Postage Bill, but quite otherwise when we see that the great West is about to compete with us in the manufacture of the staple article in our own market. Is it not time for our citizens to bestir themselves, and introduce some other business to sustain the population and real estate of the place?

THE ELECTIONS.

The Election returns from the Western States come in slowly and seem at present favorable to the whig cause. In our next we shall probably be able to give the full result in several of the states of the choice of members of Congress. But little confidence can be placed in the contest for state officers, local matters have so great a bearing on these elections.

WAR WITH MEXICO!

Rumors of war with Mexico are again revived in a shape more alarming than at any previous period. We hope such a calamity may yet be averted, but if it comes upon the nation, it will only be the legitimate result of the Loco foco management in relation to Texas. It is a proud consolation to every whig, to reflect that he voted for the only anti-annexation candidate for the Presidency, Henry Clay.

We learn from the Haverhill Gazette, that the inhabitants of that town have taken the necessary measures for the laying out of a new Cemetery. A meeting has been held for the choice of officers to the company, and the name of Linwood Cemetery was adopted. We presume it will be a rural cemetery, and an ornament and honor to the place.

Ex-Governor Lincoln has received a legacy of $80,000 from the late Daniel Waldo of Worcester.

The N. Y. Tribune says that the fourth vol. of D'Aubigne's History is nearly ready for publication in that city.

The Springfield Republican states that Amos Lawrence, of Boston, has made a donation of $20,000, to Williams College. It is to be applied to the support of a new officer, to be called the Lawrence Professor. Mr. Lawrence has also given the institution $1000 for establishing a Conservatory and Botanic Garden.

Maine. The Whigs of the State of Maine assembled in Convention, at Portland, on Thursday last, and unanimously nominated the Hon. Freeman H. Morse of Bath, as the candidate to be supported by the Whigs of that State, for the office of Governor, at the ensuing election. Mr. Morse is favorably known as the popular and efficient representative, in the last Congress, from the Lincoln (Comet) district.

STEAM SHIP GREAT BRITAIN.

This immense structure, about which we have heard so much, has at last actually arrived in New York, making a fair average trip. To give an idea of the size of this monster of the deep, we will state that her length is 322 feet, or about the distance from the Monument to the Danvers Bank, and she would entirely fill the street for that distance. She will accommodate more than 700 persons, passengers and crew; and is propelled by engines of 1000 horse power.

The greatest wonder of all, is, that this enormous vessel is entirely built of iron, with the exception of the floors of her decks and the ornamental carved work. She is driven through the water by a screw propeller. Even her rigging is composed of ropes made of iron wire! A walk eight times around her principal deck is equal to a mile.

EDITORIAL TRIALS.

We copy the following from a London periodical to show some of the trials and perplexities of an editor. We sometimes wish we could resign our station for a month to one of those everlasting grumblers who are always finding fault with what they do not understand. We should like to see what work they would make of it.

An editor cannot step without treading on somebody's toes. If he expresses his opinion fearlessly and frankly, he is arrogant and presumptuous: if he merely states facts, without commments, he dares not avow his sentiments. If he conscientiously refuses to advocate the claims of an individual to office, he is accused of personal hostility. A Jacknapes, who measures off words into verse, as a clerk does tape by the yard, hands him a parcel of stuff that jingles like a handful of old rusty nails and a gimblet, and if the editor is not fool enough to print the nonsense—"Stop my paper, I will not patronize a man who is no better judge of poetry." One murmurs because his paper is too literary; another because it is not literary enough; one would have the type so small that a microscope would be indispensable in every family; another threatens to discontinue his paper unless the letters are half an inch long. In fact, every subscriber has a plan of his own for conducting a journal." The labor of Sisyphus, concludes the writer whom we are quoting, was recreation when compared with that of an editor who undertakes to please every body!

FOR THE COURIER

DANVERS HOURLY.

A correspondent in the last Courier, asks why the coaches between this place and Salem, cannot convey their passengers at a cheaper rate, and cites the low fare of one of the Boston lines in favor of low fares. In the first place, there is no proper ground of comparison between the two places, as regards public conveyances, though in the case alluded to, we think the proprietors have been obliged to abandon their experiment for the want of sufficiency to defray their expenses. It is by no means my object to oppose low fares, but in justice to the worthy and obliging proprietors of our coaches, I wish to state one or two particulars in which there is no proper grouud for comparison between the Danvers and Boston hourlies. While the Boston coaches usually run between two established stations and oblige their passengers to seek them, the Danvers coaches are frequently obliged to go from one quarter to one mile from the main route. Besides this, the amount of baggage conveyed on our coaches is usually much greater than on those in Boston.

The actual fare between Danvers and Salem is now 10 cents, or at the rate of 10 tickets for a dollar, and generally no charge is made for children under six years of age. This cannot be considered a very high fare those who ride only occasionally and those who procure season tickets ride at a much cheaper rate.

Perhaps, however, the obliging proprietors will so modify this arrangements, as to sell 12 tickets for $1, to all such as may take the coach between the place of starting and the Coffee House in Salem, and continue to charge at the former rates when obliged to go from the direct route. We can see no valid objection to this.

But, Mr. Editor, I hope our citizens will be willing to have our "hourly line," do a prosperous and even profitable business so long ss the present proprietors shall continue so well and so faithfully to provide for all our wants. For goodness of coaches and teams and for the safety and promptness with which they perform their duties, they are unsurpassed either in Boston or elsewhere.

Candor.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—I notice in the last number of your paper over the signature of E., a very ungenerous as well as out-of-place allusion to the course of "the representative from North Danvers" last spring, upon the Railroad question; and as there can be no mistake as to whom this allusion was made, I feel called upon to say that I hope that the individual who exhibits so much meanness in being almost tempted to ask a question in reference to my course as a representative, will never be fully tempted to ask another.

Mr. E. asks the correspondent Truth, to give some evidence touching a certain point in his article, in reference to appliances.

Now as Mr. E. has in a very plain though in direct manner, brought my name before the public and reflected very severely upon my course on the R. Road question last spring; I have only to say that if E. will have manliness enough to put his request over his real signature, I will give him as well as the pubiic all the evidence in my posession in relation to appliances and will guarantee to him as much courtesy, and respect, as his correspondence may merit.

H. FOWLER.

The Fall Campaign. The Whig State Central Committee have issued a call for a State Convention of the Whigs of Massachusetts, to meet in Faneuil Hall, Boston, on Wednesday, the 24th of September, to nominate candidates for Governor and Lieut. Governor. This Convention will call together a full representation of the Whigs we shall have a glorious Convention, such an one as will arouse the true Whig spirit of the Commonwealth to vigorous action and glorious victory. To the inhabitants of Danvers, more particularly those who live in the vicinity of Goldthwait's brook and the Wallis mill pond.

The preservation of health among us so far as human agency to secure this most important good can do it, is or ought to be deemed of the first and highest importance in every community. For this all should be willing to make, if necessary, great pecuniary sacrifices—all should take heed not to hinder or oppose in opposition to the public welfare, the removal of all nuisances which may become the cause of sickness and death to themselves or neighbours. The Town having entrusted to us as their Health Committee the supervission of these matters, we feel it to be our duty to call your attention to a great and a constantly increasing nuisance existing among us, and to ask your aid and assistance in devising and executing measures to abate it. We refer to the condition of Goldthwait's brook, its tributaries, and the Wallis mill pond so called in the South Village of this town. This brook and pond receiving as they do all the filth from extensive tanneries, glue, and morocco factories, and currier's establishments, as well as much from the sinks and sewers of the dwelling houses along its valley, is constantly during the dry and hot weather of summer emitting effluvias exceedingly offensive to the senses and highly injurous it is believed to the health of those who are obliged to inhale it day and night. That this is no imaginary evil we think we have sufficient evidence in the numerous severe cases of typhus fever and dysentery, and the many deaths from these diseases, that have occurred in houses most exposed to these deleterious influences within a few years. These are serious considerations and demand more decided and effectual measures than the Committee have hitherto adopted. Before much can be done to render the dwellings on the flats adjacent said brook and pond more healthy—it seems to your Health Committee, the Wallis pond must be done away, a free and uninterrupted channel for the free run of the waters from above said Factories to the tide in Fry's mill pond opened, and drains into said channel from every place where stagnant water now accummulates constructed. But this is not the season of the year to do this. Drawing off the pond and leaving the mud and filth bare, would, during the warm season only add to the dangers already so formidable. But now is the time, when the danger is smelt, seen and felt, to orignate measures to do it away next spring before another warm season commences. This it is believed can be done without much pecuniary sacrifice from any body, as the land now covered with water would probably sell for more than the mill privileges are now worth. If therefore the present owners should longer refuse to make this improvement it is presumed a joint stock Company from among those whose real estate would be benefited by it, might be formed, to purchase the premises at a fair price and make the improvements required; and it is not to be presumed that said owners would be unwilling to sell at a fair price as they would share in the general benefit resulting therefrom. If contrary to all the best hope of this community it should be so, the law places within our reach other means of abating this nuisance equally effectual though n ot so well calculated to promote the harmony and good will of all concerned; an object never to be lost sight of in all public measures.

But we must not be satisfied with removing public nuisances alone. These may poison the air of the whole district in a greater or less degree, according to the state of the atmospheres. When the winds blow freshly, the poison from these sources is so diffused, diluted or carried away that little danger arises therefrom. In calm foggy nights and days the case is different. Then such exhalations become so concentrated as to produce most alarming epidemics. But there are among us numerous private laboratories of this poison, still more dangerous to the health of individual families, than the public nuisances above described. The best medical authorities teach, that typhus fever dysenteries and other epidemics acquire their specific character from a poison called Malaria, (bad air) inhaled with the air we breathe, generally during sleep, when the vital powers are less able to resist it, than during their more active condition when awake.

For it has been found that labourers and others may pass the day in the most infected districts of a city with safety, if they retire to an airy and healthy location to sleep, while those who sleep as well as work in the poisoned air, are almost sure to take the disease, be it yellow fever, typhus or dysentery, that is prevailing there.

This poison it is believed is generated by putrifying, rotting vegetable and animal matter. That the roting vegetable matter although it gives out but very little bad smell, and consequently is not much noticed, is more deleterious than decaying animal matter, which fills the air with the most offensive odours. These matters when suffered to rot in cellars which are not well ventilated, fill the house with this febrile poison and are, it is believed, the cause of those fevers and dysenteries which so often seize upon several members of the same family at once, or in rapid succession. We therefore earnestly call on all the inhabitants to thoroughly cleanse their own premises;—to look well to their cellars, especially if they be wet and damp ones;—to open their windows and not suffer the air to become stagnant in any room, especially bed-rooms in their houses, to destroy all the bad odours of sink drains, vaults &c., by removal; the free use of peat mud, burned plaster of Paris, or coal ashes, strewed in and about them, lest while looking abroad for the enemy of our peace and comfort, and guarding ourselves against his approaches from without, he be permitted to take a posstion within our own domiciles, from which he can assail us with far more deadly results.

Per order of the Health Committee.

ANDREW NICHOLS, Chairman.

Wm. Walcott, Clerk.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—I have been much interested in the railroad discussion in your paper, and although I cannot hope to add but little to what has been so well said on both sides, I wish to advocate what I regard as the true republican doctrine in respect to railroads, viz; that free competition should be allowed in that, as well as in all other business. I am of opinion that these corporations should have no more exclusive privileges than manufacturing companies, and that the time is not far distant when the arrogant pretensions of existing Rail Roads to all the travelling fares paid in a certain section of country will be considered just as absurd as would be the claim of a manufacturing corporation to the exclusive right to make and sell goods in a particular section. It appears to me that the principal questions for the Legislature to consider, will be whether the public will be better accommodated and what rights are affected by the occupation of the land over which the proposed road is to be laid. I cannot understand what right the Legislature has to say that individuals shall or shall not invest their property in a certain undertaking. What right have legislators to say that a certain corporation shall forever take travelling fares of a particular section of country? How can they define the limits of that section? How many miles shall it extend? or how many rods? Must a rival road only be built ten miles from the existing track or only half a mile? The Legislatures and other tribunals would find these and other questions difficult to answer, nor would every Legislature answer them alike. The only way to get rid of these difficulties is to grant the same favors to all, and let this as all other business regulate itself by competition.

It is on this broad ground of perfect liberty on the part of the people to establish railroads with the risk of competition from new routes, that we would have an awakened public opinion act on the smaller and more aristocratic branch of the Legislature. The popular branch last winter was right and all but unanimous on this subject. Its members came from the midst of the people and knew their feelings. It is a body too numerous to be acted upon by influences from existing corporations, and it almost of course adopted the liberal policy. This astonishing difference of opinion in the two houses is evidence so remarkable that the Senators in their restrictive policy misrepresented the opinions of their constituency that no political party would again attempt to send such public servants a second time. No Senator holding such views, can again take his chair in that hall,—certainly not from Essex County. Such an one could not obtain a nomination, and no man who regarded the public wishes or the welfare of his party would consent to have his name proposed.

In the struggle that is to come, we of course expect that the Directors of the Eastern Rail Road, and Stockholders in that and other similar corporations, will exert all their influence to sustain the exploded doctrine of vested rights. It is for their interest to do so, and we expect it. It is perfectly natural that they should. But when the question comes between these interested individuals on one side and the people on the other, there cannot be much doubt of the result. It is in this belief that I differ from those who fear that the establishment of a Branch by the Eastern Rail Road would defeat our efforts for a charter. I have no such fears. My reliance is on the intelligence and good sense of the mass of the people, who, I am confident, will not long submit to be told that they have no right to construct a railroad on which to convey themselves and their goods to the metropolis.

Vox Populi.

NEW RAIL ROAD TO BOSTON.

Mr. Editor—Your correspondent E. seems to sneer at the idea, that if the people wish for a new road they should have one. If the gentleman intends to take such ground, he assumes a position to which I shall not follow him. It is a monstrous absurdity and needs no refutation. In regard to simple senators, the gentleman talks as if the Senate was constituted for the sole purpose of investigating Railroad mysteries; that it is so much more of a complex subject than all others that they all dwindle into utter insignificance before its mares. If its complexities were as great as E. seems to imagine, it might require Senators of the consummate knowledge and sagacity of those of the last winter even, to comprehend all the crooks and turns, but in my humble view there was never anything so perplexing in the question of granting Railroad charters; and there never would have appeared to be any, had it not been for the superior discernment and intelligence of those same Senators. They have the credit of discovering all the tangles and intricacies.

But E. in his transition from the ground that he wish does not constitute the right to a charter, seems to poise himself in mid air. He opposes the vested right doctrine, yet cunningly asks, "Why not protect the rights of Railroads, not only in common with other similar corporations, but in common with the rights of the whole community?" "Why," he says, "make any invidious distinction?" If E. had said why not protect them under the vested right doctrine, only give it another name as vested right has become an unpopular one?—then I should have understood him; but to talk of protecting Railroads beyond other similar corporations, and in common with the rights of the whole community, is language I do not understand and cannot till the gentlemen particularizes what that protection is, or should be. His language upon this point is altogether too indefinite.

E. goes on next to state, that if we can show by good evidence, that a road can be built and supported between North Danvers and Boston, by which our business can be done at a reasonable rate, that there will be but little difficulty in uniting the town in favor of the new road. I supposed there were few, if any, who did really doubt on this point, and did not consider it necessary to enlarge upon it. The present road from Salem to Boston, pays some 25 per cent upon the cost of that road, and it requires but little common sense to infer that a new road constructed at half the cost, and going into the business part of the city by a pleasant and commodious entrance, and avoiding the Ferry,—will get at least a small portion of the travel. At any rate, it strikes us, the Eastern Railroad Company would not have talked so much about robbing them, if they were not satisfied in regard to it. Then the travel and freight between South Danvers and Boston, alone, is nearly or quite enough in itself, to support the road. The Eastern Railroad Company have estimated that a road from Beverly to Gloucester, which is the same distance, but which will cost more than our road,—will support itself; and if a road can be supported from Gloucester to Beverly, few can doubt that one can be from Danvers to Boston, say nothing of the Salem or Lynn travel. The road from North Danvers to South Danvers, will not probably be immediately profitable, but must be built for the accommodation of that part of the town, and in hopes of future compensation by the rapid increase of the population and business of that place. If E. seriously doubts whether the stock for such road would be taken up, why not consent to grant a charter with the restriction that the road shall be built within two years or some other limited time? There then could be no harm done if the stock is not taken up, and if it is and the road is built, why of course E's objections are obviated.

In reply to the very ungenerous and uncalled for attack upon the Representative from North Danvers, and to the question asked whether I could give information in regard to appliances, I would say that that gentleman is able, and I have no doubt, willing, to give him all the information he may wish, if he will ask for it in a manly way. It is unnecessary to state here in justiee to the Representative, that few men who have ever represented this town, have done it more to the entire satisfaction of a very large majority of the citizens, than he did; and upon the Railroad qu on in particular, upon which E. grounds his insinuations and charges, he acted in accordance with the express instructions of the town, and of the Committee chosen for the purpose; and with an overwhelming majority of the popular branch of the Legislature, of which he was a member. And none who know the course Mr. F. pursued through the whole proceeding, can impeach in the slightest degree, his consistency and high sense of honor.

E. then asks me to review my statement "that the gentleman now makes the refined distinction that it was settled right, but whether correct or not, he leaves an open question." In reply I will quote E's words upon it in the communication referred to, and will thank him to tell me wherein my statement is wrong. In regard to the decision by the Senate, he says, "I meant of course that it was settled right; but the question at issue is, whether it is correct or not." I am perfectly willing that any who have the curiosity, shall examine his article of July 12th, in regard to the statement I made that none could doubt that it was written on the hypothesis that the question of right was settled by the Senate.

E. also denies that he took the ground that the examination of last winter was but the examination of one side of the question. In the article to which I referred, E. says, that the discussion by the general court and Senate, "was founded upon avowed principles of public policy, and the evidence of the case as applicable to their principles;" and adds that it is the duty of those who wish the doings of the Senate reversed, "to state fully their principles on the subject, and show by evidence, &c. If this is not an admission that the examination was only of one side of the question, then I cannot understand the gentleman's language.—Why speak of the evidence before the Senate, applicable to their principles, and ask for evidence in favor of the principles of those opposed, if it were not so.

In regard to what E. considers the vested right doctrine, I would refer him to the thirty-fifth page of Mr. Loring's published argument, and the consecutive pages, and to almost, if not quite every article written in opposition to the new road.

FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to dismose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a per centage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition to the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurances to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerons patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

HARRISON'S REMEDY

FOR THE PILES.

THIS is an ointment prepared by the undersigned and has been so thoroughly tested in so many different cases that I never hesitate to warrant relief to those who will give it a fair trial, observing the directions around each box which give a plain treatise on the disease and full instructions as to diet mode of cure, &c. One application at night never fails to relieve the greatest pain and anguish. I am read to refer to numerous individuals who have proved this Remedy to be the safest, surest, speediest and cheapest CURE FOR THE PILES.

My agent in Exeter writes thus: "the Pile Remedy which you left me is all sold, please send me soon a further supply, as a number of persons in this town think very highly of it. N. GILMAN."

MORE TESTIMONY.

Salem, Aug. 6. Mr. Harrison: The box of ointment wnich I had from you has worked like a charm—I have used it only one night, and I am cured. I had used Hays' Liniment as I stated to you, with no benefit but rather was worse, it causing more inflammation. Yrs, J. W.

BLEEDING PILES CURED.

Mr. Harrison—Having given your Peristaltic Lozenges and Pile Remedy a fair trial, I have the satisfaction to inform you that they have operated wonderfully in my case. I had not been able for months to do any work at my trade, owing to exhaustion from bleeding, but I now feel myself cured. The severe pain which I had in my stomach is gone, and my strength is fast returning. I had used various remedies to no purpose, until I tried your medicine I can also state that Capt. Benj. Ireson of this town has also experienced great benefit from your Remedy I cheerfully recommend the medicine to all sufferers with that distressing complaint—the Piles.

I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements. The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compent sated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effec- of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respectable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, eaving its dusty suit of nature soon to be warmed in- animation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green, So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next thing is to find a good place to fit out at a

REASONABLE PRICE,

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States:

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances.

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS

OR AS SOME SAY,

"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doing a

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for people of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, that of pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with ful directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamatiou of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street, Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creaturcs can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to directionf. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

NEW ENGLAND

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 264, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads.—Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

LORRAINE'S PILLS.

All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vege Pills have in their composition two of the valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, er do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are wi to come forward and announce, in the most p manner, that they have been cured of long stan complaints—after all other medicines had failed. fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's etable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and tue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 184

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of please send another lot immediately. The sale Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the incr —they are becoming very popular. I sell more more every day. As a curative medicines and pur of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. fact I have noticed, that no one that has used fiuds any fault with them; they have wrought s very great cures. One lady, who has been confi to the house and bed, a great part of the time, twenty years, is now cured and able to work most her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of raine's Pills!! I might name many other ca where the cures have been as great, but have time.

Yonrs respectfully,

J. E. F. MARSH

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 184

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's P we have sold all we had last. They have given good satisfaction, better than any other pills we have in our market. I think in a short time will take the place of others. We have had fault found with them whatever; but, on the cor ry, they have been praised loudly. I think could have quite a number of highly respectable tificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,

E. MASON

Chelsea. Jan- 3d, 184

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case publication, believing it to be my duty. I have b confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole w ter, have had some of the best physicians of Bost and could get nothing that would relieve me m than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virt of Lorraine's Pills, I nad no faith whatever, bu took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I h taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entire left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a ti and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,

W. M. HALSTA

Sir. I could fill the whole of the Sentinel w similar letters to the above, but believing the abo extracts will serve for useful purposes for the pres I omit more.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in us for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

POETRY.

MY MOTHER'S VOICE.

My mother's voice! how often creeps
Its cadence on my lonely hours!
Like healing sent on wings of sleep,
Or dew upon the unconscious flowers.
I might forget her melting prayer,
While pleasure's pulses madly fly;
But in the still, unbroken air,
Her gentle tones come stealing by—
And years of sin and manhood flee,
And leave me at my mother's knee,

The book of nature, and the print
Of beauty on the whispering sea,
Give still to me some lineament
Of what I have been taught to be.
My heart is harder, and perhaps
My manliness has drunk up tears,
And there's a mildew in the lapse
Of a few miserable years—
But nature's book is even yet
With all my mother's lessons writ.

I have been out at even-tide,
Beneath a moonlight sky of spring,
When earth was garnished like a bride,
And night had on her silver wing—
When bursting buds and growing grass
And waters leaping to the light,
And all that makes the pulses pass
With wilder fleetness, thronged the night—
When all was beauty, then have I,
With friends on whom my love is flung
Like myrrh on wings of Araby,
Gazed up where evening's lamp is hung.

And when the beauteous spirit there
Flung over me its golden chain,
My mother's voice came on the air,
Like the light dropping of the rain;
And resting on some silver star
The spirit of a bended knee,
I've poured the deep and fervent prayer
That our eternity might be
To rise in heaven like the stars at night,
And tread a living path of light.

THE WELCOME BACK.

Sweet is the hour that brings us home,
Where all will spring to meet us;
Where hands are striving as we come,
To be the first to greet us.
When the world hath spent its frowns and wrath,
And care been sorely pressing,
'Tis sweet to turn from our roving path,
And find a fireside blessing;
Oh joyfully dear is the homeward track,
If we are but sure of a welcome back.

What do we reck on a dreary way,
Though lonely and benighted,
If we know there are lips that chide our stay,
And eyes that will beam love-lighted?
What is the worth of a diamond ray,
To the glance that flashes pleasure;
When the worlds that welcome back betray,
We form a heart's chief treasure?
Oh joyfully dear is our homeward track,
If we are but sure of a welcome back.

COMMUNICATION.

Mr. Courier—Your correspondent A. B., alias Common Sense, &c., &c, is exerting himself to convince the citizens of Danvers, that his present project for Railroad accommodation, is preferable to the one advocated last winter. He is now in favor of a Branch from the Eastern Rail Road, and at the same time admits that an independent Road to pass directly into Boston, would be decidedly preferable.

The principal objection which he makes to the construction of a new Road, is, the fear of competition with the Eastern Rail Road, and he pretty clearly intimates that the result of such competition would be the destruction of the Danvers Road. He thinks the idea of building a new Road is a mere speculative theory; and that there are no means which can be had to reduce it to use. If that is the fact, the Eastern Rail Road Corporation need not be so sensitive at every attempt to agitate the subject—it can do them no harm. Why such a tremendous effort to overthrow a mere theory! People so substantial ought not to be alarmed at shadows. The reasons which would operate in favor of the new Road have been frequently given. It would cost for building it but about one quarter what the Eastern Rail Road cost—For this and many other reasons, the business upon it can be done cheaper. The advantage of avoiding the Ferry which at one time was in the mind of Mr. A. B., an insurmountable objection to the Eastern Rail Road, would operate much to the advantage of the new Road; especially in the winter season. The eligible location of the new depot, and its proximity to State street, would operate much more favorably on the new Road than is anticipated. Your correspondent would probably admit that the portion of the Eastern Rail Road between Salem and Boston, cost about a million of dollars; and that the annual income of the road between those two points, is at least twenty per cent upon the cost—that the business upon the Road is increasing rapidly, that of passengers alone was about one thousand last year. We only ask for a very small portion of this travel to make the new Road good property. The Danvers Road can be built for three hundred thousand dollars; and from all the estimates made both by friends and foes, I cannot see how the income at first starting can be less than sixty thousand dollars per annum; and this without taking into view any great amount of Salem travel or the well known fact that the reality with regard to business on all Railroads hitherto constructed in this Commonwealth, exceeds more than three-fold the estimates. It will be recollected that Mr. Loring stated in his argument before the Rail Road Committee, that should the new Road be constructed, it would take a considerable share of the Salem travel. Mr. A. B. is operated upon by his fears. He probably supposes, what some have stated, that the Eastern Railroad in the consciousness of their strength, stimulated by that spirit to crush all obstacles which may cross their track, which often governs powerful monopolies—would carry passengers to Boston without compensation. It might be so; but such a movement for such an object, would not meet with the countenance of the community. It would make the new road popular. Nor would such a course of policy be followed for any length of time, as they would have business enough at fair compensation. He should occasionally look at the other side of the picture, and imagine the cars arriving in our midst, in twenty-five minutes from Boston, laden with passengers to purchase our manufactured articles—the advance in the value of our property—the great increase of business and of our population. Five years would make a city of us—and he might be the first Mayor if the people were willing.

The truth is, the town of Danvers calls for constant and uninterrupted intercourse with the Capital of the Commonwealth. We should approach it as readily and conveniently as possible. That great city is spreading out with great rapidity; and governed by a liberal and generous policy, she holds forth an encouraging hand to every enterprize which will increase her business or promote her prosperity. Our business is their business.—We there purchase our raw material and there sell our manufactured article. The Commonwealth has also with a liberal hand fostered all Railroad enterprizes, the credit of the State has been loaned for their benefit; and nothing has been lost—these privileges have been freely granted to all up to the last session of the Legislature. The people, I believe, understand what they want. They ask only that in the undertaking of establishing a communication by Railroad with Boston, they may be let alone. They ask no pecuniary aid from the State. They simply and respectfully ask for a charter—they ask for the same rights and privileges which others have had. The course of the people in this matter is marked out. It will ultimately be accomplished. They will not be driven from their position by the old and exploded notions of vested rights; that was the fofmidable weapon which was used for our overthrow, the last winter. It is the power and influence of the Eastern Railroad Corporation, which is now constantly operating in some shape or other, to prevent the accomplisment of our wishes. The people now fully understand it—the end will be well.

A.

SELECTED TALES.

A TALE OF THE EARLY CHRISTIANS.

In the reign of Marcus Aurelius Antonius, there lived in Rome a good old Senator, who had two daughters. Veronica and Berenice were noted less for their beauty and gentleness, than for the extraordinary resemblance they bore to each other and for their mutual affection. These girls were twins, their mother had died during their infancy—and it was found, after her death, that a mother's eye only had been able to distinguish the children. Had their father Flavius Torquatus, bestowed much of his time and attention on them, he might have accquired the same power of discrimination, but the noble patrican's hours were divided between the Senate house and the court, and when he came home at night, wearied, he was well enough pleased to play with his two sweet little girls, without further troubling himself concerning them. And yet he was a kind father he entreated his widow sister to take her abode with him, that she might take care of the children, he allotted for them a splendid suit of rooms—he purchased for them a numerous train of slaves. Veronica and Berenice had scarcely a wish ungratified.

As they increased in years the remarkable similarity of their persons remained undiminished, but their characters became essentially different. Berenice was pensive, gentle, it might be said somewhat melancholy, studious—and fond of retirement—Veronica was volatile, giddy, of quick and warm affections; yet did these points of difference not lessen their fond affection.

They had completed their sixteenth year, when, among other presents bro't by their father on his return from a visit to the east, was a young female slave of extraordinary intelligence and merit. She soon became the favorite of Berinice—and the noble young Roman would frequently recline for hours on her couch, while the slave beside her occupied at her embroidery, would tell her tales of her own family and native land. She wept when she spoke of her peaceful home and aged parents, and Berenice felt as though she loved the girl the more for her fond regret. She asked her for what cause her liberty had been forfeited, for she knew that Alice had not been born a slave, but on this point she could not obtain satisfaction. Berenice would not pursue the painful subject; but her sister's curiosity was not so easily suppressed. She questioned her father, and the reply of Flavius made both his daughters start back with horror.

"It was for crime," he said;—"for crime of a blacker nature than you can conceive; for crime that merited death, but I pitied her youth, Nay," he continued, "be not alarmed; she cannot—will not injure you. And—and you are Romans, and noble Berenice! and you will not descend to undue familiarity with a slave."

Berenice remembered this injunction; she meant to obey it, but shortly after this conversation she was attacked by a painful illness, and during the sleepless nights, she could not refrain from desiring Alice to tell her stories, and sing her songs, as she had been wont to do. Often and often, as she watched the light soft step of her attendant and compared her unwearied assiduity and gentle activity with the indolence and carelessness of her other slaves, she wondered what could be the crime of which so meek and unoffending a creature had been guilty. One night she felt worse than usual; and having persuaded her sister to retire for a while, she lay perfectly still, meditating on the past, and on the future, that fearful future, of which she knew so little and which she so much dreaded. Alice was kneeling on her couch, and believing her mistress to be asleep, she prayed in a soft voice to the God of Christians for her recovery. Berenice listened in attention—she heard to her surprise, the mediation of a Being implored, of whose very existence she was totally ignorant—she saw Alice rise at last, with an expression of resignation and holy hope in meekly raised eyes which she had never witnessed in the votaries of Jove. She called the trembling girl to her side, and bade her quickly explain her sacred faith, Alice hesitated; she knew the danger she would incur for both, and some remains of the fear of man lingered about her heart; but she conquered the unworthy feeling, and drawing from the folds of her robe a roll of parchment, she read aloud to her attentive auditress the record of the most surprising event in the history of mankind.

* * * * * *

Months had passed away. One evening the sisters were together in their own apartment—Veronica stood before a mirror; her vest of satin, her flower wreathed robe, her zone of brilliants, told that she was preparing for a festival. At the further end of the room Berenice was seated. She was arrayed in a plain white dress, and her long hair fell unbraided in its own rich luxuriance about her throat and shoulders. With one hand she fondled a snow white dove and ever and anon her dark hair fell over the gentle bird, and it nestled lovingly within it; the other rested on a parchment which appeared to engross the maiden's deepest attention.

'Come now Berenice,' said her sister, fixing the wreath of roses prepared for herself on her sister's brow, 'lay aside for once your melancholy looks, and send your dove to his rest, and come down with me to the banquet.'

"Not so, Veronica, not to-night; it is the anniversary of poor Alice's death,—and did she not die for love of me, watching and waiting when others slept? Her image has been with me through the day; I cannot join the banquet with my heart full of sad memories—leave me, sister, and Berenice took off and returned the wreath.

"Yet listen, one word more; thou knowest who will be here this evening. My father will frown, and Lucius Emilius will sigh when I go alone.—Lucius departs to-morrow for the battle; and shall he go without one benison from his affianced."

"No," replied her sister, speaking low and faltering, "you, Veronica, will tell him that I wait to see him here before his departure."

"Berenice! my sister, bethink you of our father; remember his patrician prejudices; surely this step———"

"Go dear sister," answered Berenice mildly, yet firmly, "for the love you bear me, do me this errand. I would not any other eye should mark the weakness I fear to betray at parting with one whom my father has commanded me to love; tell my father I am unwell, and it is true, my head and heart ache—go, dearest'—and Veronica unconvinced, yet pursuaded by the tears of her sister, which in truth were flowing fast, left her alone.

Berenice resumed her reading, but not for many minutes, she arose and shut the volume, saying "Not thus, not thus, with divided attention, and with wandering thought, may I presume to read this holy record?" She placed it within a small golden casket, locked it carefully and then walked forth into a balcony, on which the windows of the apartment opened. The moon had just risen, and shed soft light on the buildings of the eternal city, the cool thin air swept over the brow of the maiden, and calmed her agitated thoughts. She had a bitter trial before her, for she was about to inflict a deep wound on the heart of one whom she loved with all the innocent fervor of a girl's first affection, and she trembled as she pictured to herself his surprise and sorrow. And Berenice looked up at the quiet of the evening sky, and thought of the time when earthly interests would be over for her: and could she thus look, and thus think—and still hesitate? Ah! no.—

When she heard the steps of Lucius drawing nigh, she plucked a single flower from a creeping plant that overshadowed the balcony, and keeping it in her hand as a token to recall her better resolution, she advanced to meet him.

"It was not for this I sent for you hither," she said, in reply to his passionate expressions of regret and love; "you are a Roman soldier, Lucius, and I know it was neither your destiny nor your wish to be ever at a lady's side. Believe me, I have learned to look on this parting, as on a thing inevitable;" but even as she spoke, her voice faltered.

Lucius leaned forward to console her, to whisper of re-union, of life-long re-union. "Your father has promised,—dearest," he said, "that this campaign once over, the Marcomanni once defeated, I shall be rewarded, at my return, with the hand of my Berenice."

"It may be so," she answered sadly, "if you still wish it."

"If I wish it! Berenice, of what are you dreaming."

"I am not dreaming, Lucius Emilius, I am speaking the words of sober reality. You think of me as the beloved child of Flavius Torquatus; the co-heiress of his wealth and honors; of one whose hand will confer distinction. If on your return from Germany, you shall find me despoiled of all these advantages, an alien from my father's house, it may be from his heart, scorned and forgotten by his friends, despised by mankind,—".

"You will still," replied Lucius "be the same Berenice whom, in the hour of prosperity, I had vowed to love and to cherish. But what can be the meaning of your terrible words? why do you torture yourself and me by such utterly vain imaginings?"

Berenice withdrew from the circling arm which supported her; she leaned against the slight column of the verandah, her voice was softest whisper, yet every word fell with terrible clearness on the ear of her lover—"Lucius Emilius, I am a Christian."

Lucius went forth that night from the chamber of his betrothed, an altered man, for the chills of disappointment had fallen upon his proudest and fondest hopes. He had tried all his persuasive powers to induce the girl to forsake her new opinions; he had tried in vain; so nought now for him remained to do but to fulfil the engagement in which his honor was concerned, and then to return; to love her still, and to protect her if necessary, with his life. He bore with him two precious gifts to console him in his absence, as far as anything could console him—the golden casket and the carrier dove.

* * * * *

Berenice was now again alone, not as heretofore, in the solitude of her own luxurious apartment, or surrounded, as she was wont to be, with her books and music, and flowers; she was alone in the solitude of a gloomy prison chamber. A small aperture near the ceiling, guarded by iron bars, admitted just light enough to show the dismal emptiness of the place; no tapestried hangings to hide the cold damh walls, no warm carpets to cover the stone floor. It contained only a low couch, and on that the maiden was seated; sometimes raising her clasped hands in the deep earnestness of prayer, and sometimes covering her swollen eyes, to hide, it might be, from herself the tears she could not restrain. Presently a low knock was heard at the door, and her father entered. Berenice shuddered and said, "Not this; Oh! let me be spared this worst grief! yet, no! the sacrifice must be complete, give me only strength to bear it." Then she advanced and led Flavius Torquatus to her couch, and meekly kneeling before him, prayed him once more to lay his hand upon her and to bless her.

The old man answered, "It is not for this I come, unhappy girl; I come to tell you that all my entreaties have been vain; the orders of the Emperor must not be disobeyed, and his orders were that all your fanatical sect should be exterminated. Were Marcus here the tears and prayers of his faithful old servant might avail; but he is beyond the Danube; to-morrow, a general execution! Oh! Berenice! my child, my child! must I live to see your blood flow forth by the hand of a common executioner?'

"I come not as I came yesterday,' he continued, after a long pause, "with tears and entreaties to move you. Yesterday I knelt to implore you to save your father's heart from breaking, and all in vain. To-day I come with harsher purpose.—You asked me but now to take you in my arms and bless you, as I did when you were a little child. Berenice, if you do not abandon your infatuation; if you persist in bringing eternal dishonor on your line—Berenice, listen! may the curse of your father—

The girl pressed his arm heavily; she tried to speak, but her parted lips were cold as marble, and refused to utter a sound.

The old man looked on her, and the curse on his lips was stayed. He looked on her and kissed her ere he went, for he loved her mother.

"My sister!" she faintly murmured, as he moved away; but Flavius answered.

'You will never see her again; you would infect her with your superstition. I cannot be left childless in my old age.' And the old man went. And as the last round of his departing step died away, Berenice thought her worst trial was over and she withdrew her thoughts from the world, and sought to prepare her soul for death.

Late in the following day the people of Rome assembled in the amphitheatre; to witness the martyrdom of the Christians. Horrible deaths they died! Some of them were torn to peices by wild beasts; others were burned at a slow fire: some few were crucified, and they counted such a death unmerited honor. Berenice was reserved, for the last and because she was of Roman and patrician blood, she was to suffer the milder punishment of decollation. The sign was given, and when it was proclaimed by the herald that the Christian maiden was coming forth, there was so deep a silence among the vast multitude that even the advancing footsteps of the girl and her conductors were heard. But what was ths surprise of all present when they beheld not one, but two young maidens, both dressed alike in white raiment, both coming forth with the same quiet demeanor, and one, it might be the most tranquil, advauced a step toward the seat where he who governed the city, during the absence of Marcus Antonius, sat, and thus addressed him:

"It is I, most noble prefect, who am Berenice the Christian; this girl, my sister, for love to me, would fain take my name and punishment upon herself, but credit her not; it is I who am the condemned."

Then arose a touching dispute between the sisters; sisterly love lending one the eloquence which the other derived from truth. Many of their friends, and even their relatives, in the amphitheatre, were called upon to come down and decide between them, but some spoke for one and some for the other. Veronica, in her agonizing fears, had lost the light and joyous expression of her countenance; and Berenice's meek and holy hopes had chased the deep melancholy from her face and mein.

One or two brutal voices arose and said, "They both call themselves Christians, let them both die the death!" But one of the maidens answered, "Think not most noble prefect, if you thus decree, that you will be guiltless of my sister's blood; she is not a christian at heart, would to God she were! then I would no longer oppose her sharing my early death. Veronica, acknowledge the truth, and let me suffer alone. But Veronica, if she it was, persisted in her first declaration, and none could tell how this dispute would terminate, when a new incident attracted the attention of the multitude, and silenced every doubt.

A speck was seen in the air; it came lower, nearer; it was a milk-white dove. The bird fluttered round one, then drew near the other. No caressing hand was held out to receive him; but his instinct was not to be deceived; he settled on the shoulder of the one who had answered the harsh voice of the crowd, and sought to nestle as she was wont in her long hair. Many were present who knew the pet belonged to Berenice; so the people were satisfied with their decision, and the weeping Veronica, still protesting against her own identity, was torn from the arms of her sister. Then the prefect, who had been much moved at this singular scene, turned to Berenice, as she stood alone in the area, and said:

'It is not too late, young maiden, to preserve thy life; have pity on thy youth and loveliness, and on the gray hairs of thy aged father. What harm is it to swear by the fortunes of Cæsar, and to sacrifice and be safe; she answered more firmly than ever:

'I am a Chtistian, and I cannot sacrifice to your false gods! You condemn me to death, but I fear not to die in defence of the truth.' She advanced unbidden to the fatal block, and knelt by it; yet, ere she joined her hands in prayer, she bent once more fondly over her little messenger bird as if to bid farewell to the last object that told of earthly ties. There was a small scroll of parchment under its wing, Berenice felt it, and thinking it might perhaps tell her the only tidings she cared to hear, she rose again and holding it forth, she prayed permission to read it.—The prefect did not refuse, and Berenice read first in silence and then aloud:—

'The emperior Marcus is dead, and Commodus is already proclaimed Cæsar." A loud shout rent the air. It was well known that Commodus in his heart, favored the despised sect; and in spite of their prejudices, the beauty and heroism of Berenice had moved the hearts of her countrymen in her favor. A general outcry for her release was heard, but this the prefect dared not grant. Berenice was remanded back to prison until the pleasure of Commodus should be known respecting the Christians. It was not very long ere, wearied by the hardships of the camp, he returned to his capitol; and his first order was, that all Christians should be released, and restored to their privileges as Roman citizens.

In his tram came the young Lucius. He had found leisure, amid all the excitement of glory, and hardships of the campaign, to study the precious gift of his betrothed, first, for love to her, and afterwards from a wish to know the truth. So, then, their nuptials, delayed awhile by the death of Flavius Torquatus, were at last solemnized.—Berenice had the deep happiness of knowing that the husband of her choice shared the sure faith and pure hope of her own spirit. They remained not long in Rome; the follies and cruelties of Commodus rendered it distasteful to them; and though Lucius stood high in his favor, yet, as he was very capricious, they knew not how long it might be in his power to depart or abide in safety. They therefore bid adieu, without a sigh, to the luxuriance of the capitol, and embarked for a little island in the northwest part of Europe, where they knew they should enjoy safety and freedom.

Berenice was perfectly happy. She gave not one regret to the magnificence she had abandoned, for Lucius was with her; and as she stepped into a boat, a trembling, caressing girl clung to her, and a soft voice whispered in her ear, "My sister! whither thou goest, I will go; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God!"

Cure for Diarrhœa. Even after all other remedies have failed, a certain cure for it will be found in rice water: Boil the rice, take the water, make it palatable with salt, and drink it copiously while warm. We never knew this simple thing to fail.

'Can you tell me where Smith lives, Mister?'

'Smith—Smith—what Smith? there is a good many of that name in these parts; my name is Smith."

'Why, I don't know his tother name—but he's a sour, crabbed sort of a feller, and they call him Crab Smith."

'Oh?—I suppose I'm the man."

A Miss Wanting a Capacity. A common councilman's lady paying her daughter a visit at school, and inquiring what progress she had made in her education, the governess answered:

'Pretty good, Madam, Miss is very attentive; if she wants anything it is a capacity, but for that deficiency you know we must not blame her.''

'No, madam," replied the mother, 'but I blame you for not having mentioned it before, for her father, thank fortune, can afford his daughter a capacity, and I beg she may have one immeditately, cost what it may."

A young fop, about starting down to N. Orleans, proposed to purchase a life preserver.—'Oh, you'll not want it,' suggested the clerk, 'bags of wind won't sink.'

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, AUGUST 23, 1845.

THE OFFICE OF THE COURIER

Is removed to the front second story chamber in Lunt's Building—next to Rev. Mr. Field's Church.

TO OUR WHIG FRIENDS.

The Committee appointed by the Legislative Convention of the last session have issued a notice, calling on the several towns of the Commonwealth to choose delegates to meet in convention at Boston, on the 24th of September next, for the purpose of nominating candidates to be supported by the Whigs at the approaching Fall Election.

Sharing in the general quiet and the prevailing freedom from political excitement, this call has come upon us like the first note of the trumpet summoning to battle, and no sooner have we been startled from our slumbers by the sound, than there pour in upon us news of the contest already began in the West, and mingled reports of triumph and defeat. It is high time that we were in the field. It is time that once more we gird on our armour, and battling in the cause of right, strike manfully for the welfare of the People, and the good name and honor of our ancient Commonwealth.

In exchanging with our friends a few words of counsel on their political duties, it would seem hardly necessary to dwell at length upon the strong incentives to harmonious and energetic action.—The same general course of sound policy, and the same unchanging great principles, which as Whigs we have always sustained, still call for our earnest support; while on our banners, whose tattered folds bear marks of many a well-fought field, are still blazoned the same stirring watchwords, and the same bright emblems of truth.—It is true that in the last great contest, through fraud and wickedness, Henry Clay, and the Whig Party, and the best hopes of the nation were defeated. It is true that the administration of the Federal Government is now in the hands of the enemy, that the infamous plot of Annexation with its brood of threatening curses has been successfully hatched—that the next Congress will show a hireling majority ready to disturb the sources of our national welfare and imbue our national legislation with its radical and revolutionizing spirit,—that, in a word, all sober men who love their country, must be filled with sad regret for the past, and sad forebodings for the future.—But is this, therefore, a time when we should fold our hands and sink into listless apathy? The more alarming the crisis—the more does it become us as honest men and true citizens to watch eagerly the wavering fortunes of the Republic, and strive with all our might to build up that cause of Order and good government, whose triumph can alone secure lasting prosperity, or save from utter ruin. Despair belongs to craven spirits, not to those whose hearts beat high with the love of humanity and truth. Though the Whigs have been defeated, they have not been vanquished. We still have our lofty faith, our principles and measures—a faith whose integrity has never suffered—principles immutable, and the same while the Republic stands—measures which are based upon the sure foundations of wisdom and patriotism. Arraying fairly the conservative elements of the country, we are, too, the party of the people. The sober, industrious, thriving masses of the citizens are—as they ever have been—whig in feeling and action. Above all, and more potent than all to cheer us in despondency and to brighten our zeal, is the conviction—deep in our hearts as religious truth—that whatever good can be hoped for our Country, must be accomplished through the agency of the Whig Party, in its present form and constitution. Let us, then, stand firm, unbroken and undismayed, while we labor to accomplish our high mission. Let us still breast the tide of radicalism, corruption and misrule, animated by the hope that better days and a brighter sky will dawn upon our efforts. Let us, at least, do our duty, and trusting in that Providence in whose hands are the destinies of nations, await the result with an untroubled conscience.

But it is more particularly to a consideration of the political affairs of our own State that we would lead the attention of our readers. Here we come from the darkness into the light of day. Whatever else be vague and uncertain, whatever of national destiny be beyond and above our guidance and control, we know that old Massachusetts is ours, that her fortunes are wholly in our hands. Morally, socially, and politically, in the noble character of her people, in the wonderful prosperity of her business, in her history and in her fame, Massachusetts is Whig! Populous cities and towns, fertile and productive farms, the wonders of science, the comforts of art, universal confidence and credit, the diffusion of knowledge, the blessings of sound morality and pure religion, the towering columns which pierce the skies in memory of ancestral glory, the swelling canvass which wafts an opulent commerce over the remotest seas, each and all proclaim to the world and to our hearts, that Massachusetts is thoroughly and radically Whig. But it is in this confidence and strength that our chief danger lies. We are so certain of success in every contest, we place such reliance upon the voluntary action of the good sense and judgement of the people, we are so confident that the least emergency will rouse them to action, that sometimes treachery and insidious attacks may take us unawares, and we are often in danger of losing the day from the want of proper vigilance and care. We forget that the strong under current of sound principle is not stirred by every political canvass, and that the floating surface may oftimes make sad havoc with its turbulent wave. We have had of late years one terrible lesson. When the Presidential Election of 1840 resulted in the death of the good Harrison and the treason of Tyler, the Whigs all over the Union bowed down in sorrow and despair beneath the sad calamity. It seemed as if fortune was pledged against them. It seemed as if their opponents had "taken a bond of fate" for the security and permanence of their ascendancy.—These feelings prevailed in Massachusetts. Men thought there was no further use in combination and united effort—that each one must think and act for and of himself—that however it might be with the country at large, individual honesty, individual action, might and must save Massachusetts. And so we loosened our party bonds, and left the field to the foe, and the Commonwealth to her fate. As though 150,000 men could effect an object or achieve a victory without complete singleness of purpose, and thorough, hearty, simultaneous co-operation! And what was the result? The end is not yet! A blow so severe and terrible was dealt at the very life and soul of the State that she almost yet staggers beneath its influence. We who thought we held a citadel which no forces of radicalism could storm, who boasted, that wherever else the demon of anarchy and misrule might reign, we were guarded by a wall of sound conservatism which no agrarian dogmas or disorganizing plots could scale or breach, we saw the very fortress of our strength become the stronghold of the foe, and the seat from which went forth danger and destruction to all we held most dear and cherished. Principles which were baptized in the blood of our Fathers on the battle-grounds of the Revolution, institutions consolidated and hallowed by time, and wisdom, and patriotism all that we regarded as the choice bulwarks of our safety and liberty, were attacked with ruthless hand, and became the sport and prey of a savage and vandal warfare. We were saved,—but it was as by fire. Time and opportunity were alone wanted to finish the work—to disgrace our ancient character and blast our political destinies. The day of reckoning came—and the people roused from their apathy by the sense of peril, drove the demagogues and charlatans from the seats of power, and restored the reign of law and order and good government. But it was not until much had been done that could not be reversed—not until wounds had been inflicted which could not at once, if ever, be healed:—and if in the Future there be laid up for us a day of darkness and danger, the seeds of the disease and the causes of the evil are to be traced to the victory which was gained by their opponents in the year 1841, through the culpable neglect and indifference of the Whigs.

We have read this humiliating lesson to our friends at such length, because it seems to us that it cannot be too much or too often dwelt upon. And now is the very juncture for its application. Against all just calculation, by slander, falsehood, and illegal suffrages, the Whigs of the Union were as sadly defeated in the last Presidential election, as they were cruelly deceived in the result of the preceeding one, and in the feelings of regret and despondency excited, the consequences have thus far been the same. Must the parallel be completed, or shall we heed the warnings of the past, and like men rally around our time-honored flag, to guard the honor of the cause and the welfare of the State? If we believe Whig principles and measures have made Massachusetts what she is—the home of an industrious, intelligent, virtuous and happy people, and the model of a free Commonwealth; if our faith is not hypocrisy and our professions a lie, do not let us lose our dear and precious heritage by wicked indifference and sloth. Let us use the means which are in our hands to secure the blessings we enjoy. Let every Whig work as though on him depended the sole issue, and let all unite together cordially and harmoniously, as one man. If we do our duty, now and hereafter, the old Bay State is safe. Then, whatever betide the Union, and though every other star in the constellation grow dim, her light will still beam forth, pure and bright as of old, a witness to the world of the blessings of a well-ordered republican government.

ESSEX COUNTY.

From the last census it appears that the United States, exclusive of the territories, supports but about 18 inhabitants to the square mile. Massachusetts, the most densely populated state, has a fraction above 94 to the square mile. And Essex County, the most thickly settled section of equal extent in the state, has 202 1-2 upon the square mile, approaching in the denseness of its population to that of Great Britain, which has nearly 224 to the square mile. Of 27 towns in this Commonwealth which contain a population above 2000 each, nearly one half are in Essex County.

In view of these facts we would ask if such a dense population with its large towns should be restricted in its desire to provide means of intercommunication by the mere fiat of one or two Rail Road Corporations. As the population of the county increases, the absurdity and injustice of such a doctrine will be more and more manifest.

Aqueduct Obstruction. We understand that a large root which nearly filled the bore and almost stopped the flow of the water, was taken from one of the logs in the main branch of the aqueduct two or three days ago. The morning after this "removal of the deposites" the water in the reservoir had deepened four feet, and the quanity will soon be abundant. The fountains are copiously supplied.—Reg.

RURAL EXCURSION.

The Sabbath School and members of the Unitarian Society made an excursion to Spring Pond on the afternoon of Wednesday last, for the purpose of spending a few hours of social intercourse. The weather was delightful, and the gathering we understand, although not very large, was sufficient in number to render the occasion pleasing and profitable.

The following was the Order of Exercises:—

1—Prayer.

2—The following Hymn, written for the occasion by Dr. Andrew Nichols.

Hark! hear we not a voice of praise
From yonder leafy bowers,
From yonder lake of waters clear,
Set round by trees and flowers?

From hills, where fruits delicious grow,
From flowery vales beneath,
From groves, where woodland songsters sing
And spicy odors breathe?

If Nature, without intellect,
To God such hymns can raise,
How high should rise our votive strains?
How loud our notes of praise?

We, so endowed and taught of God,
So favored and so blest,
Who read and understand his word
On all his works imprest;

To whom the Gospel, grace and truth,
By Jesus Christ are given,
To guide the man, the youth, the child,
To endless joys in Heaven,—

Will sing, O Holy, Holy Lord!
Thy name all hallow'd be;
Thy kingdom come; thy will be done,
Now,—and eternally!

3—A recesss for recreation in the Grove.

4—Collation.

5—An Original Hymn, written for the occasion by Dr. Andrew Nichols.

'Tis good to set apart
One day to social love,
To feast the mind and heart
With nurture from above,
And keep the rule Our souls to save
That Jesus gave, From sin's control.

Love others as yourselves,
And to them ever do
As in exchanged estates;
You'd have them do to you,
And always aim With happiness,—
Friends, foes to bless, Love's holy flame.

May our example teach
These children,—precious charge,—
That moral height to reach
Which will their views enlarge,
So they embrace, As brother men,
How happy then, The human race.

And then would every grove
A reclaimed Eden be,
Each social meeting prove
A holy Jubilee,
For every heart And so receive,
Would yearn to give, Of joy its part.

Let all mankind obey
This universal law,
And from it, every day,
Their rule of practice draw,
Earth would become With pleasures strowed—
A bright abode, A peaceful home.

7—Parting Hymn.

THE FIREMEN'S PICNIC.

This Festival, for which much preparation had been made, came off on Thursday afternoon, and all the arrangements of the Committee were carried out in a satisfactory manner. The morning of the day was unpromising, but the rain ceased before noon, and the afternoon was as favorable as could be wished. A large number attended at the Grove, estimated at from 9 to 1200, a good proportion of which were ladies, and many beautiful ones too. The assembled company was addressed by A. A. Abbott, Esq., in a very happy and eloquent manner, and was attentively listened to by the whole assemblage. At the conclusion of his remarks he was greeted by loud cheering and applause. He was followed by Rev. Mr. Twiss, who also made a very appropriate address.

At about 6 o'clock, the company surrounded the tables, and partook of a bountiful collation fried fish, chowder, (which, by the way was richly served up) cakes, fruits, etc., after which the multitude quietly returned to their homes, and leaving behind them of the fragments sufficient for another entertainment.

The Volunteer Engine Co. appeared in a neat and appropriate Firemen's uniform, and marched from their Engine house to the grove to the music of the Salem brass band. They were joined by the "Gen. Foster" Company at their Engine house and by the ancient veteran himself who was seated with the Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements in an elegant barouche, and escorted by both companies to the place of meeting.

The Volunteer Company No 8 attracted much attention, and made themselves quite useful at the grove, acting as a kind of military guard to preserve order and do escort duty. Their return in the evening through the principal streets of the village by torch light with signal lanterns and accompanied by the full band, was a splendid and imposing sight such as has never before been witnessed here.

We regret to be obliged to state that an accident happened to one of the firemen attached to the Volunteer, Mr. Parker, by the falling of a tent pole on his head while preparing an awning.—His head was cut badly by the blow, and he was for a time insensible, but we are happy to learn that he has in a great measure recovered from the injury.

On the return of the Company to their engine-house, a vote of thanks was unanimously tendered to Mrs. Caldwell, Mrs. Bagley and Mrs. Robinson, for their kind and untiring exertions to relieve their suffering brother member.

New Lock—A new lock has been manufactured by the Lowell Lock Company, which cannot easily be blown off by powder, and against the picking of which there are, by computation, one million seven hundred chances.

REV. DANIEL POOR D. D.

We learn that this eminent and faithful missionary who left this place in 1815 for India, where he has since devoted himself with great zeal to the cause in which he embarked—has given encouragement to his friends here that he will once more return to his native country where all his relatives with the single exception of his wife, now live.—We do not undestand that it is his intention to remain here, but only make a visit to the friends and scenes of his early life, in the hope of improving his health which has been impaired by his long residence and labors in a tropical climate.—Dr. Poor has been stationed at the Island of Ceylon, where he has had the Presidency of a College established for the education of natives of the country. During his residence there he has always enjoyed in a high degree the attention and respect of the English residents in that part of India. His return to his native country will be highly gratifying to his numerous friends here, as he has for many years declined entertaining the thought of leaving the field of his labors, notwithstanding their most urgent solicitations.

Eastern Rail Road. We copy the following articles from our exchanges as an indication of the direction the public mind is taking on the question of another Rail Road to Boston.

A correspondent of the Essex County Whig, writing from Boston, says of the Railroad Committee;—

We have the consolation of knowing, that no member of the old committee will be upon the committee of the present year, if the voters and the members of Essex, Middlesex, and Suffolk, do their duty. Let our friends in old Essex nominate no men but those pledged against that old contemptible doctrine of vested rights. Let the friends of the new railroad meet and devise some plans for the furtherance of their object, and have their petition presented and acted upon, immediately upon the opening of the session; and the opposition will amount to just nothing.

☞There will be another effort made the next session of our Legislature to obtain a charter for a new and independent railroad from Salem to Boston, to come into the business part of the city.—The ferry at East Boston is a great annoyance; also the disobliging habits of the Eastern Railroad, with strong indications of a kindred disposition on the upper road, will have a strong tendency to induce the Legislature to grant a charter. The funds to build the road could be raised in a week.

FOR THE COURIER.

A mischievous animal, called a Mink, visited the premises of Dr. Patten, of this town, and destroyed, within four days upwards of sixty hens and chickens; he was finally killed, after having destroyed the last chicken and in the act of destroying the old hen. Perhaps, some of his neighbors would save some ammunition, if they could prevail upon one of these animals to stand sentry over their gardens.

FOR THE COURIER

Mr. Editor—I am very unfortunate in not being able to write so as to be understood by your correspondent Truth. I suppose it must be my fault as I am not much experienced in writing, and yet on a review of the points where Truth does not seem to understand me, I can hardly see how I could be misunderstood by any one. Discussions are not very profitable unless the parties can make themselves understood; and I hope I shall have better luck in future.

Truth says, "E. seems to sneer at the idea that if the people wish for a road, they should have one. If the gentleman intends to take such ground he assumes a position which I shall not follow him. It is a monstrous absurdity and needs no refutation." What is this absurdity? The editor had stated that "we think we have a right to a road if we wish for one." And Truth had said substantially, "That the principle on which a new road is demanded is the simple and plain one that if the people wish for a road, they should have it." If this be true, the Court is bound to grant the Road merely because the people wish for it or demand it; and the expression of the wish would make it the imperative duty of the Court to grant the Road. And to test this question, I asked, "How many persons it requires to express a wish that has such absolute authority over the General Court." I think the difficulty of giving a direct answer to this question would show the inconsistency of the ground taken by the gentlemen. They have not attempted to answer the question. Now I do not sneer at the idea that it is the duty of the Legislature to give a respectful attention to all petitions from their constituents, that are made in a respectful manner; and to give the petitioners, and remonstrants if there be any, a fair and impartial hearing, and then to decide on its merits; and to do so requires men of sound judgement and experience—and if Truth thinks this needs no refutation I agree with him: let it pass. But I say if the mere expression of a wish for a Road makes it the duty of the Court (or "Senate" if that suits the gentleman better) to grant the Road, that the qualifications necessary for this service might well be sneered at. I did not "intimate that the Senate was constituted for the sole purpose of investigating Railroad mysteries."—But I think Truth has more than intimated that Senators are to be chosen this year who will obsequiously obey the mandates of these Railroad petitioners, and it would seem that the candidates must pledge themselves in advance to do so, or how are we to know whether they have the peculiar qualifications required? I wonder if the gentleman has his candidates selected!

In discussing the subject of vested rights, it is very important that we should have a mutual understanding as to what is meant by the term Vested Rights—and for this purpose, in my communication of 26th of July I stated what I understood to be its meaning, as Truth has not objected to my definition of the term, I think I have a right to presume that he agrees with me; and if not I should be happy to see his definition of it. If I have defined it right, I cannot perceive that Mr. Loring has advocated the doctrine of vested rights in his argument. Truth has said that the objections brought against what we demand as of right, are that the faith of the State is pledged to the Eastern Railroad not to charter another that should interfere with its profits. Now I ask again who holds to this doctrine and where does he find it? Have the Senate or the Railroad committee avowed it as their principle? Let us have their language if they have. I have not "talked of protecting Railroad Corporations beyond other similar Corporations," and of course may be excused from explaining. You, Mr. Editor, ask why should not cotton factories, stage companies and turnpike corporations be considered in the application for more charters? Well, I think they should, and the same principle will apply to them as to Railroad Corporations. If the public interest will be advanced they should be granted, otherwise not, and of this the Court must judge.

Truth says he supposed there were few if any who did really doubt on the point whether a Road could be built and supported between North Danvers and Boston. Now I know many who do doubt it, and I have frequently requested Truth to give the facts to remove these doubts if he could, but up to this time he declines doing so, and I infer the evidence is wanting, or he would favor us with it. He says the present Road from Salem to Boston pays some 25 per cent, and it requires but little common sense to infer that the new Road will get at least a small portion of it. Well, I think so too, but at what price? Truth says, "the travel and freight between South Danvers and Boston is nearly or quite enough in itself to support the Road;" if this be so, suppose we have the matter compromised—say let the Eastern Railroad build a Branch from Salem through South Danvers to the Plains, and you build one from South Danvers to Malden: then all can be accommodated, and can go to Boston in the way they may wish; and this will relieve you from making the North Danvers Branch. As to the Gloucester Branch, no one pretends that an independent company could make it pay; but in connection with the Eastern Railroad it may pay, and thus the people of Gloucester will get a great accommodation, which without the aid of the Eastern Railroad could not be had. I think this Company has manifested a becoming desire to accommodate the people on the Cape, which could not have been induced by any fear of competition.

If Truth thinks he can discover the slightest ground for his assumption that I took the ground that the examination last winter was but the examination of one side of the question, even in the quotation he has made, he is entitled to the benefit of it—I have no fear that any body else will share it with him. I will here remark that the word "discussion is a misprint, it should have read decision. I should have corrected it before if I had not supposed the reader would have seen the error.

Truth seems to decline giving the information that I asked in relation to the influence that may have been exerted over the Representative from North Danvers, and instead of this has given us his eulogy of him, after saying it was unnecessary to do it. Did he think so? How Truth knows that the course of the Representative was so entirely satisfactory to a very large majority of the people of the town, I am at a loss to see; does he infer it from the last vote of the town in favor of the Branch to North Danvers? Truth says, Mr. F. acted in accordance with the express instructions of the town and of the committee appointed for the purpose. If there have been any such instructions by the town, I am not apprised of them, and I hope they will be published, but as to the instructions by the Committee I say Mr. Fowler paid no regard to them at all; and to show it I will state the transactions in your next. E.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Danvers resident near Goldthwait's brook and Wallis mill pond, held at Union Hall, by invitation of the Health Committee, to take into consideration the condition of said stream and pond, and to devise measures for the abatement of any nuisances which may exist therein, John W. Proctor, Esq. was appointed Chairman, and Joseph Poor, Jr. Secretary.

Dr. Andrew Nichols addressed the meeting, and read extracts from medical works, showing the injurious effects to health, arising from impure and stagnant water, in causing pestilential diseases, and for other facts relating to the subject, referred to the published report of the Health Committee.

The Chairman next addressed the meeting, and stated that he was convinced of the pernicious effects arising from the bad condition of the water.

Mr. Joseph Tufts stated that from the experience of forty years in the vicinity of the pond, he had become convinced of its injurious effects on the health of the community and in particular of his own family, and concluded by offering a motion that a committee of three be chosen to confer with the owners of the pond, in regard to a permanent draining of the same.

Dr. G. Osborne stated his experience as confirming the views already expressed, and recommended the adoption of the motion of Mr. Tufts.

Voted, to adopt the motion of Mr. Tufts.

Kendall Osborn, Henry Poor, and A. P. Phillips were chosen said committee, with instructions to report at an adjournment of this meeting.

Voted, To adjourn to Thursday evening, Sept. 4th, to hear the report of the committee and for the transaction of any further business relating to the subject.

SHAVINGS.

The cost of building a magnetic telegraph does not vary much from $130 per mile.

A large iron steamer is under contract to be built at Wilmington, Delaware, to ply between Chelsea and Boston.

Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr. of Boston, is to deliver the address at the State Agricultural Fair at Utica, in September.

☞By the census recently taken, it appears that Portland now numbers a few short of 16,500 inhabitants.

Sentence of Death.—Andrew Howard, convicted in the Court of Common Pleas at Dover, N. H., of the murder of Phebe Hanson, has been sentenced to be executed on the 12th of November next. The prisoner is said to have evinced the utmost indifference on the receipt of his sentence.

Danger from Matches.—The Methodist meeting house in Saxonville narrowly escaped conflagration recently in consequence of the falling of matches from the shelf to the floor, by the jarring of a carpenter's hammer. Matches should always be kept in metal or earthen safes. Many of our supposed incendiary fires may arise from the careless use of matches.

Samuel Long, the keeper of a groggery in the district of Moyamensing, was committed on Tuesday in default of $2000 bail, for a most infamous assault and battery upon his wife, with intent to kill, the previous evening. The poor woman is not expected to recover.

☞ Mr Everett, our Minister to England, will return to Boston in the packet of the 4th of September.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

The Evening Tribune of Tuesday says :

We learn that a gentleman who arrived in this city this morning from New Orleans, which city he left on the 11th inst. states that news had been received at Mobile that the French brig-of-war Mercure had arrived at Pensacola from Mexico with dates to the 27th July. Up to that date there had been no war declared, and he heard of no action of any kind on the subject of the difficulties with this country. The American residents in Mexico were generally making preparations for leaving that country.

FATAL ACCIDENT. Mrs. Lois Jackman, aged 61 years, lost her life on Friday evening, in a melancholy manner. She had stepped out with the intention of visiting a neighbor who was sick, and on the way, being either assailed or alarmed by a dog, stepped into a door to escape him, and in her haste opened a door leading to the cellar instead of one leading to the chamber, was precipitated down the stairs, breaking her neck in the fall, and was taken up dead.—Newburyport Herald.

DEATHS.

In this town, Mr. James Gillis, aged 21, a native of Glasgow, in Scotland. The circumstances connected with his decease are of a peculiar and interesting nature. He had been about three years in this country, and on the 31st of July last, was married to Miss Janet Ogilvie, who is also a native of Glasgow, and who had arrived in Boston but the day before the necessary arrangements were completed in anticipation of her arrival. Thus in the short space of three weeks from her landing upon these shores, she is reduced to lonely widowhood—a stranger in a strange land.

The deceased was a member of the Division of the Sons of Temperance in this town, and his remains were attended to the silent tomb, by the members of this Division and several brethren of the Salem Division, in accordance with the established rules and usages of the fraternity. The Order has, in his death, sustained a very heavy loss. He was emphatically a Son of Temperance, and by his gentlemanly deportment, his excellent moral character, his steady and industrious habits, and his kind and humane disposition, had endeared himself to them and will be long remembered by them.

Mr. Gillis was an operative in Mr. Southwick's extensive leather manufactory, every department of which was closed on the occasion of the the funeral, and Mr. Southwick, his clerks and all the workmen, (with the exception of a sufficient watch) were in attendance and thus paid a tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased, by performing the last sad offices to his remains. Of the pecuniary affairs of the deceased, it becomes us to say but little. It is well known however, that those of the most correct habits are not always in the most easy circumstances. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Any information on this subject can be obtained on application to Mr. Gillion, Walnut street, in whose family Mrs Gillis will remain until the necessary arrangements shall be made for her return to her native country which will be done in the shortest possible time.

FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to dispose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a per centage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us,to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition to the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

☞ We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurances to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem ; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞ Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞ Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞ As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerons patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

HARRISON'S REMEDY

FOR THE PILES.

THIS is an ointment prepared by the undersigned, and has been so thoroughly tested in so many different cases that I never hesitate to warrant relief to those who will give it a fair trial, observing the directions around each box which give a plain treatise on the disease and full instructions as to diet mode of cure, &c. One application at night never fails to relieve the greatest pain and anguish. I am ready to refer to numerous individuals who have proved this Remedy to be the safest, surest, speediest and cheapest

CURE FOR THE PILES.

My agent in Exeter writes thus : "the Pile Remedy which you left me is all sold, please send me soon a further supply, as a number of persons in this town think very highly of it. N. GILMAN."

MORE TESTIMONY.

Salem, Aug. 6. Mr. Harrison : The box of ointment wnich I had from you has worked like a charm —I have used it only one night, and I am cured. I had used Hays' Liniment as I stated to you, with no benefit but rather was worse, it causing more inflammation. Yrs, J. W.

BLEEDING PILES CURED.

Mr. Harrison—Having given your Peristaltic Lozenges and Pile Remedy a fair trial, I have the satisfaction to inform yon that they have operated wonderfully in my case. I had not been able for months to do any work at my trade, owing to exhaustion from bleeding, but I now feel myself cured. The severe pain which I had in my stomach is gone, and my strength is fast returning. I had used various remedies to no purpose, until I tried your medicine. I can also state that Capt. Benj. Ireson of this town has also experienced great benefit from your Remedy. I cheerfully recommend the medicine to all suffering with that distressing complaint—the Piles.

An Act to incorporate the Essex Company

Be it enacted, &c.—

Sect. 1. Samuel Lawrence, John Nesmith, Daniel Sanders, and Edmund Bartlett, their associates are hereby made a corporation, by the name of the Essex Company, for the purpose of constructing a dam across Merrimack river and constructing one or more locks and canals in connection with said dam, to remove obstructions in said river by falls and rapids, from Hunt's Falls to the mouth of Shawsheen river, and to create a water power to use, or sell, or lease to other persons or corporations, to use for manufacturing and mechanical purposes; and, for these purposes, shall have all the powers and privileges, and be subject to all the duties, and liabilities, and restrictions set forth in thirty-eighth and forty-fourth chapters of the Revised Statutes.

Sect. 2. Said corporation may hold real estate not exceeding, exclusive of the expenditure for the dam and canals, three hundred thousand dollars, and the whole capital stock of said corporation shall not exceed one million dollars, and said stock shall be divided into shares not exceeding one hundred dollars each.

Sec. 3. The said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to construct and maintain a dam across said river, either at Deer Jump Falls, or Bodwell's Falls, or some point in said river between said falls, and all such canals and locks as may be neccessary for the purposes aforesaid; and for the purpose of making said dam, and constructing the main canal for navigation, or transports, may take, occupy, and inclose any of the lands adjoining said canals and locks, or dam, which may be necessary for building or repairing the same, for towing paths, and other necessary purposes, not exceeding twenty feet on each side of said canal, or locks, and may blow up and remove any rocks in said river, and dig in any of the lands near to said river, through which it may be necessary to pass said main canal: provided, that said corporation shall not obstruct the passage of rafts, masts, or floats of timber down said river earlier than the first day of June, in building said dam, nor keep the same obstructed for a longer time than five months before the opening of said canal for the passage thereof.

Sect. 4. If there shall be occasion, in the prosecution of the powers and purposes aforesaid, to make a canal across any public highway, or if highways shall hereafter be laid out across such canal, it shall be the duty of said corporation to make sufficient bridges across said canal, and to keep them in good repair.

Sect. 5. The corporation shall make and maintain, in the dam so built by them across said river, suitable and reasonable fishways, to be kept open at such seasons as are necessary and usual for the passage of fish.

Sec. 6. The said corporation shall erect, and forever maintain such canal and locks as shall be necessary around any dam constructed by them; the locks to be not less than twenty feet in width, and ninety feet in length; and said canal shall be so constructed, that there shall be easy, safe, and convenient access to, and egress from, the same; with fastenings and moorings for the reconstruction of rafts or floats, after the egress; and shall be free and not subject to any charges whatever for the passage of rafts of wood and lumber, masts, and floats of timber, and be tended by a keeper employedby said corporation, and opened at all resonable times, promptly, for such passage.

Sec. 7. The fishways in said dam, and the entrance and exit of said canal, and the moorings and fastenings at the exit, shall be made to the satisfaction of the county commissioners of the county of Essex, who shall on application to them by said corporation, after due notice, in such manner as they shall deem reasonable to all parties interested therein, and a hearing of the parties, prescribe the mode of constructing the same; and any person who shall be dissatisfied with the construction thereof, when the same are completed, may make complaint to said county commissioners, setting forth that the same, or either of them, are not constructed according to the prescription of said commissioners; and said commissioners, after due notice as aforesaid, shall proceed to examine the same, and shall accept the same, if they shall be of opinion that they are built and made according to such prescriptions; or, if they shall be of opinion that the same are not made according to the prescription, may require the same to be further made and completed, till they shall be satisfied to accept the same; and the expenses of said commissioners, in such examination, shall be paid by the said corporation.

Sect. 8. Any person who shall be damaged in his property by said corporation, in cutting or making canals through his lands, or by flowing the same, or in any other way in carrying into effect the powers hereby granted, unless said corporation shall, within thirty days after request in writing, pay or tender to said person a reasonable satisfaction therefor, shall have the same remedies as are provided by law, for persons damaged by railroad corporations, in the thirty-ninth chapter of the Revised Statutes.

Opening of Spring!

Magnificent, Chaste and Original Designs for Remodeling

"OAK HALL!"

FOR SPRING TRADE!

OPENING OF "OAK HALL" FOR THREE MONTHS!

Advice to Professional Men, Merchants Clerks with moderate Salaries, Farmers, Mechanics, Seamen, Firemen and others, VISIT OAK HALL!

ARRIVAL OF SPRING GOODS!

To Wholesale Dealers.

THE OPENING

This Morning, for Three Months!

I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements, The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compensated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effect of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respecable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, having its rusty suit of nature soon to be warmed inanimation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green; So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next hing is to find a good place to fit out at a

REASONABLE PRICE,

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States:

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances,

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS

OR AS SOME SAY,

"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doing a

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 264, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less, that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different Kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads.—Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbelical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand. As a matter of convepience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for people of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, that of pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfecily than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth, paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit. The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with ful directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamation of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all cases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street, Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above to do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done good and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subscriber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

POETRY.

"FORGET-ME-NOT."

Forget thee?—then hath Beauty lost her charms
To captivate, and Tenderness grown cold,
As the perennial snows of mountains old;
And Hope forsook her throne, and Love his arms.
At morn thou art mine earliest thought, at night
Sweet dreams of thee across my soul are driven.
Almost thou comest between my heart and heaven,
With thy rich voice, and floating eyes of light.—
Forget thee? Hast thou then a doubt of me,
To whom thou art like sunshine to the spring?
Forget thee?—Never!! Let the April tree
Forget to bud—Autumn ripe fruits to bring—
The clouds to fertilize—the birds to sing—
But never while it beats, this bosom thee!

THE SHOEMAKER.

'ACT WELL YOUR PART, THERE ALL THE HONOR LIES.'

The shoemaker sat amid wax and leather,
With lapstone over his knee.
Where, snug in his shop, he defied all the weather,
Drawing his quarters and sole together:
A happy old man was he.

This happy old man was so wise and knowing,
The worth of his time he knew;
He bristled his ends, and kept them going,
And felt to each moment a stitch was owing,
Until he got round the shoe.

Of every deed his wax was sealing,
The closing was firm and fast;
The prick of his awl never caused a feeling
Of pain to the toe; and his skill in heeling
Was perfect and true to the last.

Whenever you gave him a foot to measure.
With gentle and skilful hand
He took his proportions with looks of pleasure,
As if you were giving him costliest treasure,
Or dubbing him lord of the land.

And many a one did he save from getting
A fever, or cold, or cough;
For many a foot did he save from wetting.
When whether in water or snow 'twas setting,
His shoeing would keep them off.

When he had done with his making and mending,
With hope and a peaceful breast,
Resigning his awl, as his thread was ending,
He passed from his bench to the grave descending,
As high as the king to rest.

SELECTED TALES.

ELLA WINSHIP.

"Marry her, oh no! She has gentleness, and sweetness, and beauty enough, 'tis true, to make wedlock itself a state of bliss; but she and I were not born for the dark atmosphere of poverty which fate would probably, under present circumstances spread over our tender heads. My inheritance, Charley, will never cause my brain any over-excitement for splendor or extent; and hers is worse by far, for, although an only child, and motherless Ella's father keeps her in durance vile, as regards the purse-strings, and lives himself in the most frugal style. He is but a clerk in one of our houses here. What patrimony can he leave from this for Ella's dowry."

"What then do you mean to do George? You must be careful how you toy with those delicate heart-strings of hers, or the day will come when the memory of that blooming cheek and sparkling eye will be more hard to bear than the worst taunts of your most bitter foe. Marry her or leave her now, George De Witt, or the love I have borne you will turn to ashes, which shall never know life and warmth again."

They stood upon the steps of the Astor House, these two young men, while they discussed the matter of life or death to the heart of a sweet girl who at the moment, perhaps, was dreaming sweet dreams of love and happiness, as she performed her household duties with a song upon her lip and bright joy in her eye. One of these young men, as may have been seen, was a nobleman of God's own ennobling, a champion of virtue, a defender of woman's only treasure, her good name. The other; a man in love without the means to marry as he wished, but with the heart to betray the woman he adored. They were friends, but as opposite in principle as friends might well be. The friendship of Charles Grey was founded upon appreciation of the natural generosity of George's heart, and other agreeable qualities which he possessed, as well as deep interest on account of some ungovernable traits of character, which might lead him into error, and, perhaps, unspeakable suffering. George was resolute in the performance of any favorite object; and now the most delightful, the deepest passion of his soul, was moved by Ella Winship, whom he must obtain.

The friend of his youth stood beside him, advocating with passionate warmth, with all the eloquence of a heart bursting with contending emotions, the pure right by which she would become his own spotless wife; and his own spirit gave a sweet echo to such persuasions. But years would have to pass before he could make his home as free from wants connected with luxury and taste as were those in which he was an accustomed guest, and he would not introduce his friends to a more humble one. His exterior was prepossessing, and he had many friends among the fashionable and gay, though few knew of the serpent of evil which lay coiled around the spring of generous emotions in his heart. A slave to sensuality, how can we wonder that, feeling for the first time the power of love for a being so like a fairy in lightness of step and heart, George should find the serpent defiling the pure current of his better affections, and drying up the fountain whence could only spring Ella's hope and his own safety.

With one parting and earnest word from Charles, the friends separated. George with face turned towards the star of his true, but polluted adoration; and his friend with his, pale anxious and despairing, turned from the gaze of the passers by, it being a book too easily read of his heart's agony. He, too, loved the sweet girl, who stood so much like an unconscious victim before the altar of his friend's selfishness! He loved too well to hope. In his soul's worship he believed her too pure, too much a creature of a fairer world, to be the companion of such as he, the wife of his bosom! He did not hope, he only watched her as she moved along, or smiled, or performed some gracefully kind act for her father or his friends, and thought of no more blessed a man than he who should obtain her. And now he had heard one who had watched her as he had, and loved her, not as he did, ah no! talking coolly of writing shame on the fair brow he would not have dared to touch; and fixing those eyes which danced with such a light and joyfulness, in the dull gaze of hopelessness and despair. Could he save her. He would make one attempt, yet trust mostly to the angel of purity to guard her fairest flower from the worse than bloody hand of one who thought on her destruction. The very absence of guile from the spirits of love, which filled the chambers of her heart, might be the cause of her loss; for she could not think one so kind, and apparently her friend, could mean anything so deadly to her peace as the plan laid out by George.

Once in his own room and upon his knees, Charles' suppressed feelings burst forth in prayer, such as must reach the pitying ear of the merciful One he pleaded with. He prayed for the mantle of heavenly protection to fall upon that lovely head; he prayed for his rival's happiness in the pure possession of his own beloved one, rather than she should fall from her sisterhood with the angel of light; he prayed for confidence in the power which, unseen, keeps virtue and innocence from flower-covered pits, formed in their path by man's corrupted hands; and as he prayed, sweet peace stole over his anxious spirit, and angels administered unto him of hope's heaven-fountained draught. He rose from his knees, conscious that he had gained the holy spell he needed to keep his heart from breaking, and while it was upon him, he communed with himself faithfully, as regarded his duty both in the case of Ella and his own soul's welfare. It will be seen what changes this communion resulted in.

Let us now look upon the object of these two passions, so different and yet so alike in intensity.

She is reading, and the book is—what? The legacy of her dead mother. A pocket Bible, with notes in the dear handwriting of her lost parent, traced in hours of sickness, as aid to the memory of her child when the heart from which they sprang could from its icy cells pour out no longer the warm gushes of maternal love and counsel, which would keep the treasure she left behind for such a death as hers, and a re-union in heaven.

She is safe! With such a spell about her—the breathings of a sainted mother upon the book of God—she cannot fall! Daily she weaves into her soul the golden threads of wisdom which her dying parent's fingers traced amid the undimmed ustre of words spoken centuries ago, and the dark web of vice can find no place there. The world knows not of her sanctuary, to which she retires with her mother's legacy, but thinks because she is so gay of heart and light of step, that she cannot think of dull religion's requirements and rules. It looks with its own worldly eyes upon her, and, not being spiritually sighted, sees not how these dull things are to her spirit what the dew and rain are to the tender grass and flowers, which would wither soon if it were not for the time of refreshing, when the scorching rays of day give place to the cool heaven and smiling stars of night. She knows that the dazzling bewilderments of the would are sometimes more withering than the burning sun to the wild rose on the plain and she welcomes the dew which restores freshness to her spirit.

Now she sits with her cheek resting upon her hand, while she reads with earnestness the never-wearisome counsels of a heart which has found a sorrowful home. Her silken hair covers the small round ear, and is gathered into a cluster of curls behind, which flow all the more beautiful over her bended neck for being independent of aught save their own gracefulness; nature's own fingers have rounded each drooping curl, and art looks with envy upon the perfection of the work. She is not dressed with elegance, as her father allows her little for luxuries; but she is lovely enough without the aid of ornament. She does not herself desire them, when she looks upon her father's care-worn features, and thinks how much weariness, anxiety for her is causing his body and heart. But not thus easily does George forget that her dowry and his inheritance will be inadequate to furnish these luxuries of dress, and those of a gay establishment if they should marry.

He could live sumptuously alone; but even with love he could blend philosophy, and calculate the great addition in expense of a wife, and such a home as he could wish. He could not marry! and from such a resolution as this he fell into another viler than could be creditable of one with such noble qualities as he sometimes displayed.

That very evening, when his friend Charles had made one day's journey nearer heaven, he was to begin his poisonous work.

As Ella closed her chamber-door that night, her heart gave way to its burden of joy in tears! She had been told she was beloved. She had been drawn to the bosom of one she had dreamed about so much and fondly, and had felt, for the first time, the kiss of love upon her lips. She calmed herself after the flow of tears had relieved the heart, and then, as the events of the evening passed before her mind, she remembered George had said it were better her father should know nothing of the love as yet; and, although the lightness of her spirit would fain have rebelled against never so light a weight, the remembrance of that one strange request would struggle in through the crowd of happy images which filled her heart, and scattered them before it.

Why should her dear, kind father be kept from knowing the glad hope of his only child, the fair prospect which had that evening opened before her eyes, making life seem like a garden of undying flowers and sweet-singing birds? How would it overflow her cup of joy to tell the reason of the gladness which would to-morrow sit upon her brow, and have the eye of her father moisten with gratitude at the recital of her love and its return. She could not tell him how unnecessary it was to fear for her now, to wear his life away in sorrow that he should leave her alone without that keystone of the cold world's heart—magic gold. He toiled early and late, and was much and kindly favored by his employers, and yet he did not seem to accumulate. He had nothing to rely upon but the labor of his pen—why could she not pour the healing secret into his anxious breast! She had promised; and the pillow, upon which her sweet head rested that night, was witness of a troubled sleep, notwithstanding all the reason she thought she had for joy.

The morrow came, and though the glad news struggled to burst the barriers she was fain obliged to put upon it, the secret was kept. The father wondered at, but was not told the source of a fresh fountain of brightness in his dear Ella's eyes. He did not catch the sight of a sudden cloud which occasionally flits across them.

Thus days flew past, and weeks, and months. Mr. Winship looked with favor upon the growing attachment, as he thought, of George to his dear child; and Ella, seeing his pleasure in their intercourse, thought it no sin to keep faithful her promise to George.

Attempts had been made to tamper with the purity of Ella's soul, but the end of the vile plot had not come yet. She was so innocent he dared to progress but slowly; but now had arrived the time when she was to know why she had been sought so lovingly and well.

It was a calm sweet evening, that they wandered out, and turned their steps towards one of those lovingly parks which give to New York lovers such an escape from the bustle and neighborly intercourse of the crowded streets. It was such an evening of beauty that it seemed as if no evil purpose could be spoken, while the stars looked down as if they were angels eyes, and the faint shadows of the new moon their poised wings They walked long and late, and when they reached Ella's home, a voice so broken and unmusical that George himself started at the sound, whispered "I will answer you." And the two parted.

There was a dreadful suspense, a fear which weighed upon George's spirit so heavily, as he wended his way through the silent streets, that he was induced to stop in his walk, and ease the burden by exhilarating wine. How easily can man make merry with the celestial messengers which sometimes visit his soul? Before George De Witt had reached his comfortable bachelor apartment in the ——hotel, Broadway, the heaven-tuned accents of the small voice were hushed and the spirit of sensuality whispered hope of success into his soul's willing ear.

If he could have looked into the little chamber whither Ella had dragged her fainting form after their parting and witnessed the overpowering violence of the emotions he himself had raised, the heart that was not all blackness would have repented with earnest prayers the misery it had caused.

The merciful fount of tears had broken up, and in an agony of grief, with her small hands pressed upon her heart, she paced her room, her beautiful hair hanging in moist tresses around her pale, despairing face, and her white dress showing the sad change in the heart of the sweet being who had arranged it so joyfully for the evening walk. That long, sad night she found no rest for soul or wearied frame, and being excused to her father for not appearing the next day, in consequence of being slightly unwell, she remained in her own room to gain of heaven some hope, some mercy. Her wearied powers sunk into a short repose before the evening shut in, and then when many glad, and many sad were tasting the good gift of night, sweet sleep, she had sufficient calmness, peace, and strength given her, to answer the faithless, the unblessed.

Midnight, May 10th.

It vows, if prayers, if acts of mercy, could wash away the memory, why a blight had fallen upon my spirit, my life should be a constant exercise of all these blessed penalties. If you too can forget, I shall rejoice. But memory is a curse to those who have done deeds of darkness, to those who have broken hearts, to those who have meditated wrong to the trusting and the happy. My heart has been stung, but thanks to the young maiden's God, it knew not the evil thing which would have led me to be the victim of a deceiver. My memory will give a bitter draught to me for I know not how long a time, but it will not be for guilt which shall bring agony. The brightness of a dream I have lived in many months has vanished, the veil which covered the deformity of a being I thought so beautiful is drawn aside.—The blow has been so sudden, and so rudely given, that it has destroyed the image I had cherished in the inner sanctuary of my soul, it cannot be restored to its shape of loveliness and undisputed throne.

I have said if prayers, and acts of mercy, could cause me to forget why my heart's late hope had been withered in a night, I would strive to win forgetfulness. Yes, it is not that I have lost the sweet faith of a first love, it is not even that you have cast away from your forehead the seal of divine nobility, and blackened it forever in my eyes with the impress of that spirit, which seeketh the innocent to ruin and betray, It is not this, but the degradation which has entered in my soul as I remember one has dared to believe me willing to be a partner in a sin so great, in ingratitude to my father and my God; this it is, which makes me pray that I may forget! That one should have had so strong a hope of his success as to have named it, so little confidence in the virtue he wished to undermine! I would not give you to the merciless power of remorse if I could, but the love which might have been a comfort in your hours of languor, when the heart should be faint and the body weak, a cheerful and faithful companion in poverty, or distress, which would have lasted to the end if treated only kindly; that love has changed to a calm pity, that one so nobly gifted, and so to appearance like God's noblest work—an honest man—should have a canker worm at his heart! Memory has now but one sting, the thought that I could by word or act have led to the hope in any being's mind, of fellowship in the crime which was named so boldly in the presence of the pure stars when we last met. This humbles me; for this sorrow alone, if you repent that evil whispering; you need pray to be forgiven. Ella Winship.

Charles Grey had prayed—the angel of purity had been sent—the loved one had received no hurt.—He had wondered after the warning he had given Ella's father, that no greater watch was put upon the intercourse of the lovers, but his warning had not reached its destination.

The note which he himself saw given to the Scotch girl who was the only servant of Mr. Winship, met with a romantic and fatal end. A young countryman of hers had just arrived at the house, and at the moment of the call to the door for the note, Willie had just commenced his story of loneliness and grief at her departure from their native land, and his determination to follow and unite his fortune with hers. After her quick return from answering the bell, he poured out the long-stored treasure of his heart, and as she listened with downcast eyes and blushing cheek, she—as many others, lovelier, have done, but with a rose, perchance in their more fair hands,—tore unconsciously the note she held into a multitude of fragments, and did not think of the mischief she had done, until the sealing kiss had been given, and the humble lovers vows had been joyfully exchanged. Then knowing the impossibility of making out the contents of the tattered billet, she had thrown the remains upon the fire, and the father of Ella was left without a warning of the quicksands which were around his child. But there was a star in Ella's own heart, which gave her light to see the evil of the path which George would have made appear so thornless and safe when strewn with the flowers of constancy and love.

A year from the time when the spell of Ella's love had been broken, Edward Winship lay lifeless and cold before his almost heart-broken child. He had been brought home dead soon after his departure for his business, and Ella was an orphan. Some disease of the heart had attacked him suddenly, and fatally, and when hope and happiness, had begun their cheerful work upon eye, and smile, and brow, and her heart was made glad by seeing her father's unusual gayety, Ella was wrapped again in the dark mantle of sorrow.

The clergyman of the church attended by Mr. Winship, had been sent for by his employers, to break the sad news to Ella, before the arrival of her father's body; and Charles Grey found his tears mingling with those of the orphan he loved so well, and his heart struggling to keep back the flood of too warm a sympathy for her unprotectedness and desolation. Since he had chosen the part of a preacher of the gospel, for which his parents had educated him, but which until that night of earnest prayer and self-communion connected with Ella's history, he had no inclination for, he had been absent from the city preparing himself in the solitude of his father's country residence for the mission he felt so important and responsible.

Three months before this last sad blow to Ella, he had, in consequence of the death of its pastor, been established over the church of which Mr. Winship and his daughter were communicants. Never had that worshipping assembly listened to the breathing of such elevated piety, such eloquence of appeals, such pictures of the loveliness of virtue, and such paintings of the darkness of vice! They little knew what sorrow had given birth to that earnestness, and devotion to the cause their preacher advocated. One dear listener it was who inspired him to utter noble truths with power. For as he looked down upon her loveliness subdued, even in her young years, by the world's hollow-heartedness, he could not but speak eloquently of the need there was that the heart of man should become a garden of the Lord. He was beloved, almost venerated by his people, notwithstanding the short time he had been among them, for the sympathy and kindness displayed in his private life, as well as for the faithfulness and sincerity with which his pulpit duties were discharged.

Ella had been glad to renew the intercourse which she had once enjoyed with him, although it recalled to mind the name and existence of one long since dead to her heart, and almost memory. But she did not permit herself to lessen the pleasure of Charles Grey's renewed visits to her father's house, by any shadows of the past. He yet continued to love with the same intensity, but with some ray of hope at the evident satisfaction his presence gave both to father and child.

He knew that George had been cast out from the circle of innocence, and he was without a rival. He began to look upon the prospect of having Ella for his wife, hopefully and with joyful gratitude.

Now that she was alone in the wide world, he would be her brother, until he could bear a dearer name; and so tenderly and faithfully did he perform the kindly duty, that Ella did not sink under the weight of her orphan lot. She had no relative excepting those across the wide Atlantic, and Charles took, with her tearful and grateful approval, the closing of her father's pecuniary affairs, which though far from being complicated, Ella would not suffer to remain unsettled. Together they examined a small collection of papers which they discovered in his desk, among which they found one labelled "a legacy for my child." It was opened with a strange feeling of wonder and hope, when they discovered it to be a policy of life insurance for $16,000, once renewed, and now the source of unexpected competency to the bereaved and as she believed destitute Ella. And for this her father had denied himself and her all luxuries! This he had struggled so hard to purchase from his yearly salary! While Ella sobbed upon the supporting arm of Charles—for such a token of a father's providence broke down all barriers of form or ceremony—the light broke in upon her heart, that he had cherished for a long time the presentiment of his death, and had thus preserved her by many sacrifices from the ills of poverty. How had she been beloved! And now together they knelt in prayer, and while Charles poured out of its abundance the gratitude of his soul, for the sweet beings' prosperity who knelt beside him there so pale, and yet so beautiful in her dark weeds, she echoed with her spirit's deepest voice the warm thanksgiving, and promised the poor and needy should taste the bounty which had come, as if from heaven, in the hour of her need.

Why need we lengthen this sketch of rewarded virtue, and disappointed sin. The world's heart was opened by the rich dowry which Ella owned, and she was courted by the gay and fashionable wise now that her sweetness and beauty had such an exquisite setting as bright gold. The easy grace and intellectual charms, of the heiress as she was now called by those who loved this title better than a nobler one, was the theme of all tongues, especially among those who could feel no envy of her loveliness—the made portion of the gay world. Upon one ear the praises fell most cruelly. George De Witt had loved the beautiful Ella, although he had refused to govern the passions which might have caused her misery. And now that she was sought for by those he considered would have neglected him had he married her and lived humbly, the remorse which follows evil deeds came upon him, and he almost cursed himself for his meanness which had lost him the jewel and the casket too. He met her once, and the Ella he had injured was introduced to George De Witt. She bore herself with a noble air, with a composure tinctured with a graceful pride, while he bent his eyes before the slight glance of acknowledgment necessary to the ceremony, as if he had been a culprit at the bar of offended purity. After the lapse of time she had been convinced there had been no error in her course with him, that should have led him to his base proposal, and she now felt as if it had been premeditated wrong. The just pride of her woman heart was all aroused, as she saw the man who had, perhaps, been more successful with victims as pure and innocent as herself, so smiled upon and caressed.

He watched her that evening with thought impossible to be painted, with the most heart-stirring words of repentance and ardent love, but she was now as far above his reach, as the cup of water to the rich man pleading in the region of the unblessed!

The next meeting was at her bridal. It was a charmed feeling that drew the false one to that crowded church. At his own altar stood Charles Grey, and by his side Ella, with the holy peace of a true love upon her brow, and an inspiring beauty in her eye, leading the spirits of those who gazed upon her, above the worldly ceremony, to heaven, where the recording angel received with glad foreknowledge the bridal vow.

George De Witt went from the crowd alone. His rival's noble countenance beaming with exalted joy he could not leave behind, nor the remembrance that his might have been the protecting arm upon which that gentle bride leaned with such sweet confidence, and his the glance which might have been the fountain of gladness to her soul.

Ella would not have wished him such a punishment, even in her deepest indignation.

Raising Pork. Every farmer knows full well that if he has to winter his pigs, even in the most fertile of corn countries, and cannot get over three cents per pound for the pork, he is losing money how important, then, that he keeps such a breed of swine, and feeds them so well that he can bring the pigs, dropped early in the spring, to weigh from 200 to 300 pounds, in December and January. Let people say what they will about the necessity of having old hogs to make a thick cut of clear pork on the ribs for packing, we know this is all gammon. We have seen many a pig well fed from his birth, that would weigh full 220 pounds, and cut four inches thick of clear pork on his side at nine to ten months old; and have heard of others weighing 300 pounds, and cutting five inches. Now this is all that is necessary for the Navy or Boston fisherman, and more than is desirable by consumers in general. Our best market for pork is England, and the people there prefer it from hogs weighing not over 175 to 200 pounds, and like the lean well mixed with the fat. We would never winter any thing but breeders of the swine family, and the moment the pigs were dropped we would commence shoving them with feed till ready for the knife. The farmer who pursues this course will make from 30 ro 60 per cent more on this pork than those who winter their spring pigs. As for autumn pigs, we would not have them. Let the sows breed but once a year.

Three or four years ago we prophesied that the low price of pork would soon make it scarce, and now it is a fact; and by and by, when the choice boars will be wanted to improve the breed, they cannot be had, for our farmers are growing careless again in their stock, and breeding helter skelter in every direction. A pig is getting to be a pig once more with—long nose or short—sharp back or round. We advise all those who have good hogs to keep them so. Don't sell and fat the best; keep them for breeders and fat and sell the poorest. In this way one will be continually improving, and in any event he will have a good breed on hand, always ready for his own use and the benefit of a careless neighbor.—American Ag.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, AUGUST 30, 1845.

THE OFFICE OF THE COURIER

Is removed to the front second story chamber in Lunt's Building—next to Rev. Mr. Field's Church.

DANVERS THIRTY YEARS AGO.

In our last we announced the probable return from a foreign country of one of our citizens, who has been absent since the year 1815. This announcement has led us to make a few reflections on the changes which have taken place in our village within those 30 years. Those of us who have lived here and can remember the conditions of the place at that period can have but a very inadequate idea of the changes that have been wrought in that space of time. These changes have passed gradually and in detail before our eyes and we have hardly regarded them; but let one who has not seen Danvers since 1815, now visit us and he would scarcely see anything in the place to remind him of its former appearance.—Place him almost any where in the streets and to what familiar and unchanged object could you point to indentify the place! If the object itself has not changed, everything around it has. Impression strongly engraven on his memory would naturally lead him to seek for scenes as they existed at the time of his departure. Where he would ask, is the green lawn in front of the meeting-house? It is not to be seen and he is pointed to five meeting-houses where 30 years ago he left but one. He looks about him for the school house, Gardner's bridge, the old gun house, Symond's tavern and the "old Raccoon Box." They have all disappeared and the whole scenery is changed.—Even the hills have been removed and their places filled with houses and places of business. Every thing looks new and strange. New and populous streets meet him at every turn. The little lane that led to Foster's Chocolate Mill has become Foster St., and "skunks cabbage lane" is now Holten St., and well lined with new and handsome houses. He passes down the main street, and sees an old land mark "The Eagle" perched on a post on the wrong side of the street. Where it once stood he sees a granite monument. He scarcely reads its inscription before his attention is directed to Boston road which he only remembers with its low stone walls and few black looking houses but now a populous street, with its stately church and beautiful dwellings. He is conducted farther down the main street, but looks in vain for a familiar object, until, casting his eyes to the right he sees the old 'garrison house' black and tottering with extreme old age just as he left it 30 years ago, and this marks the locality of this before mentioned "skunks cabbage lane." Encouraged by this familiar object, he passes on and looks enquiringly for Pool's bridge and the steep hill beyond. No signs of bridge or watery plain remain but he guesses at the locality by seeing an effigy of a Lamb on a post apparently as he saw it 30 years ago, and this is the only thing that has no signs of age. He looks for another familiar land mark, the Reindeer, but it is gone. He however sees another lamb on a large building opposite and is not able to determine which is the true land mark.

He continues his walk to the burying ground, and finds that many a new tenant has entered its enclosures. He remembers that when he last saw it there were only two pairs of white grave stones and he now sees more than he can well count and some of them inscribed with names familiar to him. He pauses in this elevated spot and looks with amazement at the spreading settlement as it extends over fields once considered remote rural haunts. He asks for Gardner's Hill and is told that the march of improvement has removed it, with its graves, and a wide street passes over its site. He is conducted through this street and desires to revisit the romantic spot on the north side of the stream which in his youth he so often sought for musing and recreation. He enters and finds its pleasant groves consecrated as a resting place for the dead. He wanders through its familiar shades and then returns to his ancient home.

On his return he passes through new streets and witnesses new establishments of an industrious population. Before he reaches his paternal mansion he passes a new grave yard, populous with the remains of the departed, and on the graves many familiar names, some of them near and dear to himself. He now goes to the patriarchal mansion and finds the old homestead as little altered as any other place but even here all around it is changed. This house was at his departure, almost the only one in the street that was painted and other dwellings were few and far between.—We purposely refrain from any reflections which may be suggested by the ravages of time on a space allotted for one generation to pass off the stage of life, so far as it relates to the friends of his youth. We may well believe that many of the fond anticipations in which he may have indulged will be disappointed, and that painful as well as pleasant feelings must be expected from a visit under circumstances so extraordinary.

ENDICOTT PEAR TREE.

This venerable tree famous for its origin, having been planted by Gov. Endicott himself, is still living and bears fruit. We learn that in Ipswich there are now an apple and a pear tree from grafts which were brought from England in 1636. They both bear fruit, the apples being the kind called Permains and the other tree bearing the Bell pears.

RESIGNATION OF MR. HUNTINGTON.

We learn that Asahel Huntington, Esq. sent in his resignation as District Attorney, to the Governor, on Tuesday last. His reason for resigning, is, that the salary is not sufficient for the duties performed. The criminal business within the District, comprising Essex and Middlesex counties, has increased very rapidly of late, so that now it requires his constant attention and unremitting labor. His salary is $1 000 per year, from which he has to defray his travelling expenses and board while in attendance at Court. In addition to this, the Criminal Terms in the two counties follow often in immediate succession, and frequently one is commenced before the other is terminated. We cannot blame Mr. H. for his resignation, as his civil business will undoubtedly be more profitable to him, as well as easier to perform. But we do blame the State for its narrow policy in not offering sufficient salary for such an important office, to secure the best men for it. Mr. Huntington has performed the duties of his office for fifteen years. No State officer has ever been more faithful, or administered his office with more economy than Mr. H. With his ability and success as a prosecuting officer, the community are well acquainted. His powerful efforts in the conviction of the President of the Phœnix Bank, some two years since, in opposition to Messrs. Webster, Choate and Dexter; and his able defence of the License Law at Washington last winter, have established his reputation among the first of his profession in the country.

We do not think any persons can be obtained for the office who can perform its duties with half the ability or economy that Mr. H. has, and the cause of temperance in particular will find, that in him it has lost its ablest defender. Is it not pitiable that the State of Massachusetts by a suicidal stroke should deprive herself of the assistance of such men?

OLD COLONY LEGISLATION.

The Indians have always received hard measure at the hands of our countrymen; but never perhaps had more reason to complain than when they were made game of by the Pilgrim Fathers in the following Law of the Plymouth Colony enacted in 1675.

"It is ordered by the Court that whosoever shall shoot of any Gun on any nessesarie occation or att any game whatsoever except att an Indian or a woolfe shall forfeite five shillings for every such shott, till further libertie shall be given."

The injunction to "honor thy father and mother," however it might commend itself to the reason of the heart, was thought in olden time to need the countenance and support of the Law to make it a rule of conduct. The precocious youths of the present day who are wiser than their fathers in their own conceit, may esteem themselves fortunate that they opened their eyes upon this world when the old dispensation of the Colony Law had yielded to the less rigorous exactions and milder spirit of modern times. They would certainly have had a "smart chance" of a short life under the provisions of the following Law of 1671.

"If any man have a stubborn or Rebellious Son, of sufficient years and understanding, viz, sixteen years of age, which shall not obey the voice of his Father, or the voice of his Mother, and that when they have chastened him, will not harken unto them; then shall his Father and Mother being his natural parents, lay hold on him, and bring him before the Magistracy assembled in Court, and testifie unto them, that their son is stubborn; and Rebellious, and will not obey their voice and chastisement, but lives in sundry notorious crimes such a Son shall be put to death, or otherwise severely punished

WAR WITH MEXICO.

Our exchanges for the past week or two, have abounded with startling rumors of War between Mexico and the United States, but although nothing definite can be ascertained, it is evident from the active preparations which are making by both governments, and their hostile movements that a collision between the two nations may be feared.

The following is the latest items which have reached us:—

Gen. Arista, with his starving, unpaid and deserted Mexican troops, amounting to about 3,000 men, who were left at Montery, was advancing east, and had reached on the 12th inst., within a day's march of Matamoros. Gen. Paredes, who was mentioned as being at San Luis Potosi, but about to march on Monterey with four or five thousand men, is now said to be actually on the move for the latter city whence he will continue his route to Matamoros or other points higher up on the river.

The New Orleans Picayune says Gen Gaona, too is on his way to the frontier line, with 3000 troops, as is reported. These three bodies compose the 10,000 men, we presume, of whose advance upon Gen Taylor so many idle rumors have been circulated. That they are not as yet ready to measure arms with the United States troops and do not pretend at present crossing the Rio Grande, we think may be inferred from the facts that no general-in-chief has yet been named for the conduct of a campaign, nor have any contracts been entered into for provisions and other necessary supplies for so large a force.

GEO. STEPHENSON.

We notice by an English paper received by the last steamer, that a testimonial in the shape of a statue to be erected on Tyne Bridge, has been voted by one of the great Railway Companies to GEO. STEPHENSON, the distinguished Engineer and originator of locomotive travelling. £2 000 were voted for this purpose.

☞We have received a copy of the Nottingham Journal, Eng., by which it appears that the Railway excitement still continues in that country, and large dividends are made on the existing lines.

RAIL ROAD TO ANDOVER.

We learn that measures are in progress to obtain a survey of a route for a rail road from Salem to Andover, and that sufficient interest in it appears to have been excited to secure its location if the result of this survey should prove favorable. The advantages of such an undertaking would be of almost incalculable advantage to Salem. Not only would it open a direct internal communication with a vast extent of back country but it would secure to her the greater part of the business of the proposed new spindles about to be built on the Merrimack. Salem would then be the most accessible point where its goods and raw materials could be shipped and landed for transportation to the factories. The lime, lumber and other heavy materials for building as well as the flour, molasses, grain &c. could be landed and forwarded with much less expense from Salem than from Boston, and a vast increase of business to the former place would be the inevitable result. Salem should take hold of this project in good earnest.

IMPROVEMENTS IN NORTH DANVERS.

We notice that the new improvement of widening Maple St. is going on with rapidity, the wooden portion of the Village Bank building having been removed to the rear of its old location, and the remaining part in process of demolition. Mr. S. Preston's house is already raised and materials are on the ground for the erection of other buildings on the burnt district.

FRUITFUL. Mr. Thomas Stimpson this week brought into our office a branch of an apple tree, being a graft of one year's growth, which had on it about 40 good sized apples. They were so crowded together that there was no room left to grow, and they took it into their heads to come down from the tree, in obedience to that law of gravitation which Sir Isaac Newton discovered by the d s n of one apple. Since we have been a printer we never have seen such a stick-full, and we have a strong inclination to see them all put into pi.

DANVERS ALMS HOUSE.

This fine building was struck by lightning during the severe thunder storm of last Saturday afternoon. One of the chimnies was knocked down and the fluid passed down to the basement of the building, doing some more slight damage. Some of the inmates were stunned and others much frightened by the shock.

DANGEROUS. We caution those of our citizens who are in the habit of using the sidewalk, against a dangerous trap on Main street, nearly opposite Aborn street. Here there is a hole about three feet deep, directly in the most travelled part of the path, covered partly with a loose board, but with room just sufficient to admit the body of a small child or to break the leg of a full sized man. This has been in the same state some time, and we do not know whose business it is to remove the nuisance. We have just heard of a serious injury to a lady on a visit to this town, who on a dark evening fell into this pit. We hope, before any fatal accident shall happen to some unwary stranger, this dangerous hole will be covered or filled up, or that the friends of the last victim will take measures to find who is responsible for the personal injuries which may be suffered from such culpable negligence.

We have received the August number of The Temperance Offering, which is a very neat little periodical, and filled with matter calculated to do a great deal of good to the cause which it supports. We would recommend it to all as a periodical worthy of patronage. It is published at the low price of 50 cts. per year, and by the covers we perceive it can be subscribed for at W. D. Joplin's or Daniels & Poor's, in this town.

CORRECTION. In the communication of 'A.' on the first page of our last paper the writer was made to say that there was an increase of passengers on the Eastern R. Road in one year of 1000. By a mistake of the compositor which escaped the eye of the proof reader, this error was left uncorrected. It should have been 10,000 which makes quite a difference.

A VENERABLE CLERGY.

The last Christian Register contains an interesting statement of the Congregational ministers, who were, in 1822, pastors of churches in this state and still remain settled over the same religious societies. Of 350 Congregational Ministers at that date only 63 now continue attached to the same churches.

The following are those belonging to Essex County;

☞The following pithy and unquestionable axiom contains more truth than poetry:—

The man that in this world would rise,
Must take the news and advertise.

Sunday Travelling. It is stated on "The best authority," that from and after the 1st November next, there will be no Sunday travelling on the rail roads between Albany and Buffalo, CASSIUS M. CLAY'S PAPER STOPPED.

It will be seen by the following account, which is copied principally from the Boston Chronicle, that the publication of the True American has been suppressed, by the violence of a lawless mob:

Mr. C. M. Clay, who had been sick with a typhus fever for nearly a month, was so far convalescent as to employ his pen in a few brief paragraphs in the paper of August 13. In that paper he published an article, designed to warn the slave-holders against the indignation of the non-slaveholders, who will one day resent the oppressive and overbearing conduct of the slaveholders. In this he used certain expressions respecting the white men slaveholders, which, if applied to slaves, admitted of an inflammatory construction. The mobocrats, headed by Tom Marshall, seized upon these expressions to excite the public mind, and with some success.

On the 14th, about twenty men, chiefly political and personal enemies of Mr. C. M. Clay, met at the court-house, and appointed a committee of three, two of them men with whom he was not on speaking terms, to notify Mr. C. M. Clay that his personal safety required the discontinuance of his paper. Mr. C. replied in terms of manly indignation and defiance to their cowardly attempt at intimidation while he was known to be on a sick bed; for it seems the effort of getting out his paper of the 13th produced a relapse.

On receiving this reply, the court-house meeting voted to adjourn to Monday, the 18th, and call a mass convention to suppress the paper.—Mr. C. M. Clay issed a handbill, containing his correspondence with the committee, and the following honest explanation of the paragraph on which so much excitement had been created:

"It will be perceived, by the reader of that article, that the whole piece alludes to national policy, and the loss of a high sense of justice in the administration of our national affairs, resulting from the influences of negro slavery upon the national action, even to the habitual violation of the Constitution; and I further meant to convey the idea—in my elliptical manner—that, in a country like ours, where suffrage is universal, and standing armies impossible that those men who are drawing substance and power from the existence of slavery, at the expense of the interests of the great masses of the legal voters of this Union, who are now and have been sacrificed at the shrine of slavery,—that those men, the white millions (having no allusion whatever to the blacks of the South) would, in the course of time, when that poverty pressed upon them which slavery had been most instrumental in causing, follow the example of their plunderers, and, in turn, plunder them. Such was the case in 'France, when the oppressed rose upon the oppressor, and spared neither property, life, nor sex.'"

This ought to have been satisfactory, coinciding, as it does, with the whole tenor of Mr. Clay's writings. And so, doubtless, it would have been, had the authors of the excitement wished for satisfaction; but the truth is they wished to get rid of the paper, and were only employing the paragraph as a convenient instrument to execute their foregone conclusion.

Under these circumstances, on Saturday Mr. C. M. Clay prepared and published in a handbill, a brief and hurried exhibit of his own plan for the abolition of slavery in Kentucky. He begins by declaring his creed to be, that LAW—the law of the land—is to be sustained at all events indispensable to any social security, and that he would do nothing against the laws or unauthorised by the constitution of Kentucky. And as the present constitution of the State does not authorise the egislature to execute what he believes to be the best plan of emancipation, he is therefore in favor of a CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE, to be regularly called and lawfully constituted, for the express purpose of amending the constitution in this behalf. He then goes on to tell what he would do; and he closes by expressing his willingness to be counselled by friends or foes in regard to his mode of conducting the discussion.

This address was evidently put forth in the hope of calming the excitement, and bringing the mob to reason. Vain hope! It was not reason that raised them, and how could reason calm them? So good an opportuntiy—a paragraph that could be misinterpreted, and the writer sick upon his bed—could not be lost. The demagogues went forward with their work, as will be seen by the following extract of a letter, dated

"LEXINGTON, Aug. 18, 1845.

The largest meeting I ever saw in Lexington assembled to-day in the court-house grounds, and put forth a lengthy and able address (T. F. Marshall, author), setting forth the objects and aim of the assemblage, as a preamble to several very spirited and energetic resolutions, part of which have already been carried into effect, namely, the appointment of a committee of SIXTY, to repair to the office, box up the materials, if no resistance was made, peaceably—forcibly if they must, and place them at the railroad depot, subject to Mr. Clay's order.

"This has been done, I belive; and the meeting soon reassembled to receive the report of the committee."

The United States Gazette says:

The press and types were boxed up, and conveyed to the car office, subject to the order of the owner, who will, probably, publish his paper in Cincinnati, and have about five times as many readers as he could have secured without this violence.

The correspondent of the New York Herald says that on arrival of the committee of sixty at the office, "the key was given them." He adds "that C. M. Clay has been sick with the typhoid fever for thirty-five days, and could not be personally present."

AGRICULTURAL. Mr Benjamin Poor, of the Indian Hill Farm, near Newburyport, proposes to have an exhibition and experimental trial of agricultural tools, on Friday, Sept. 5, at 11 o'clock A. M., at which time it is proposed to test the qualities of several Ploughs, adapted to sward lands.—Also the Sub-soil and Side-hill Ploughs will be used, and a valuable labor-saving machine, for removing Hassocks from meadows.

Any manufacturers of Ploughs, or labor-saving machines, by which the cause of agriculture may be benefitted, are requested to forward them, as neighboring teams can be obtained to give a fair trial to any number.

Gentlemen residing at a distance can have a conveyance to the Farm from the railroad depot at Newburyport, by previously informing Mr. Poor, by mail, of their intentions.—Salem Reg.

☞Hay is dearer in New York than ever known, and the owners of horses and cattle begin to feel the effect of high price upon their purses. The price ranges from one dollar to a dollar and an eighth per cwt.—Mail.

We have received the following from our c pondent "E." whose article in our last, in conseq of part of it having been lost or mislaid, closed abruptly.

FOR THE COUR

Mr. Editor—By the accident that prevente insertion of the whole of my communicatio tended for last Saturday's Courier, I was u to state some facts which I thought materia proper understanding of my denial that the R sentative from North Danvers acted in accord with the instructions of the Railroad Comm and also to reply to Mr. Fowler's letter. Th lowing is the concluding part of that commu tion: "I say Mr. Fowler paid no regard to th structions of the Committee, and to show t will state the transactions as I understood the Just before the action of the Legislature on reports of the Railroad Committee, the Dan Representatives requested a meeting of the pe of Danvers or of the Railroad Committee of town, to be called in order that they might be formed what course they ought to pursue: a m ing of this Committee was accordingly held, all the members but one were present, (ei in number.) The Bill that had been reporte favor of the Branch to North Danvers provi that the Eastern Railroad Company might buil Branch to South Danvers with liberty to extend to North Danvers—the Committee voted to quest the Danvers Representatives to endeavor get the Bill amended so as to make it imperati upon the Eastern Railroad Company to build Branch to North Danvers, and that it should done if at all, with the consent of the town of Da vers; and this was all the instruction that w given by the Commi tee on this point in their sociated capacity—whether any individuals of t Committee gave other instructions I will not s now. Instead of doing this, Mr. Fowler mov in the House, to strike out the whole section, wi out moving for the amendment, and made a spee in favor of his motion, and the motion prevaile After expressing himself so strongly in favor the Branch to North Danvers, I infer that son extraordinary influences must have operated up him when he did this thing—others can draw the own inferences. In answer to the communicari of Mr. Fowler, I would say that I hold myself r sponsible for the truth of the communication allu ed to, and he can have my name for the purpo of correcting them if not true. I suppose that w the constituents of our Representative, have perfect right publicly to express our views as the character of their public acts in representin our interests, and they have the same right to vin dicate themselves from any imputation agains them. If my inferences drawn from the facts sta ed, are not correct, I do not see that Mr. Fowle needs the aid of my name to correct them. M Fowler can communicate as much of the informa tion asked, as he thinks expedient, and with tha measure of courtesy he may think the occasion re quires.

E.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—The communication of a new vo unteer in the Railroad controversy, in your las under the signature of A., refers so distinctly t my remarks, that some reply may be expected. Now Sir, I have no fault to find with his commen tary on what I have said, or any change of opin ion that has been wrought on my mind by inves tigating the subject. I readily admit that m wishes have ever been in favor of an independen Road. The gentleman thinks that "Mr. A. B is operated upon by his fears." If he means by this, a proper degree of caution, induced by a comparison of the subject in all its bearings, I am content—but if he means any other description of fear, he is entirely mistaken.

I am not desirous of extending the discussion of this subject, and think the agitation of it now rather premature; but still if Mr. A. who asserts the propriety and necessity of a new Road, and on whom is the burden of proof, will state his case, and the facts in support of it, I will endeavor to reply. And if he can adduce facts that will establish his case, I shall be happy in being convinced by his argument.

Deeds Most Foul Come to Light. At New York through the vigilance of A M. Smith, Mrs Costello has been arrested and committed under $6000 bonds for procuring an abortion upon a fair young girl who had been ruined by Charles Mason, a dry goods dealer and a married man. He is also committed in $5000 bonds, and Maxwell, who sold the body, in $1000. A case of death from the Costello practice has also come to light, in which the vtctim, a young girl was packed in boxes, in February last, and sent by Adams & Co's express to the following address;

Care of Peter Dudley, Concord, N. H."

Good Fruits. Our good friend, Mr. Merriam of Chelmsford, has laid upon our table a nice lot of vegetables, which he has raised the present season. He informs us that ten years ago, most of his land was bought for nine dollars an acre. On a quarter of an acre of this same land he has raised the present year, garden sauce which he has sold in the Lowell market for one hundred and sixty dollars. This is a per centage equal, we think, to factory stocks, or even to the great copper mining stocks of Lake Superior.—Lowell Courier.

A TREE GROWN DUCK. A gunner in Dulham N. H. found a piece of fungus on a decayed white birch, which had grown into the shape of a duck about to fly. The curiosity is now in Lowell, and the editor of the Courier could hardly believe, when he first saw it, that it was not a work of art. It is of a dark mahogany color; the bill, the head, and every thing about it is wonderfully like a duck.

☞We regret to learn, that ASAHEL HUNTINGTON, Esq., the able and faithful Attorney of the Northern District, is about to resign his commission.—Gaz.

☞The case of Wm. Wyman, late Cashier of the Phœnix Bank, comes on for trial on Monday next, at Concord, Mass.

"OAK HALL!"

FOR SPRING TRADE!

OPENING OF "OAK HALL" FOR THREE MONTHS!

Advice to Professional Men, Merchants Clerks with moderate Salaries, Farmers, Mechanics, Seamen, Firemen and others, VISIT OAK HALL!

ARRIVAL OF SPRING GOODS!

To Wholesale Dealers.

THE OPENING

This Morning, for Three Months!

I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements. The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compensated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effect of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respectable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, having its dusty suit of nature soon to be warmed in animation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green, So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next hing is to find a good place to fit out at a

REASONABLE PRICE,

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States.

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances,

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS

OR AS SOME SAY,

"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doing a

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

LORRAINE'S PILLS.
All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by things that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce; in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them finds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills!! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yours respectfully,
J. E. F. MARSH.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 1843

Sir:—Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills, we have sold all we had last. They have given very good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others. We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,
E. MASON.

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 1844

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtue, of Lorraine's Pills, I had no faith whatever, but I took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirely left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,
W. M. HALSTAL

Sir. I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent—all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

Respectfully, your ob't serv't,
JAMES COLSON, Esq.

A severe pain, in both sides cured!!

LOWELL, Mass., April 20th 1944.

Sir,—For the last few months I have been afflicted with a severe pain in both sides, at times so hard that I could scarcely get my breath. * * * * It is a pleasure to feel well,—but a much greater one to say that I was cured immediately upon taking one dose of Dr. LORRAINE'S PILLS. J. BROOKS.

A hacking cough constantly annoyed me!

BOSTON, Mass., June 1st; 1844

Sir,—In February last, I took a sudden cold, after which a hacking cough constantly annoyed me, and this, combined with my other maladies, rendered me truly miserable, as everybody told me that I was in a consumption. Since, I have taken LORRAINE'S PILLS and now every body tells me that I am well;—I fee' as well as ever I did. J. E. S. McKEY.

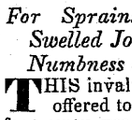
EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.



The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

GOLD PENS. A superior article just receive and for sale cheap by G. W. E. CRAFTS. 174 Essex St. Salem.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for peopleo f all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetab les from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, thatof pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effectedby them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with ful directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamatiou of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street, Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

NEW ENGLAND
TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand. As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

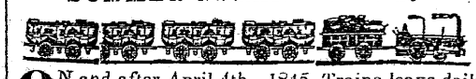
REMOVAL.
DR. J. A. ROBINSON,
SURGEON DENTIST,
SALEM,

WOULD respectfully give notice that he has removed from his old stand, opposite the City Hall, to No. 20 Washington street, recently occupied by A. E. Phillips, where he is ready to perform all operation, in Dentistry, in a most thorough and workmanlike manner.

His experience and success in inserting whole sets either by atmospheric pressure or springs, enables him to furnish them at rates which cannot fail to suit those in want of an article of superior quality.



His method of inserting Teeth, both singly and on plate, with or without Gums, has been found to be satisfactory and successful as combining beauty of finish and adaptation, with all the requisites of mastication and articulation.

Particular attention paid to filling Teeth so as to render them serviceable for many years, and also to the regulation of Children's Teeth.

HARRISON'S REMEDY
FOR THE PILES.

THIS is an ointment prepared by the undersigned, and has been so thoroughly tested in so many different cases that I never hesitate to warrant relief to those who will give it a fair trial, observing the directions around each box which give a plain treatise on the disease and full instructions as to diet mode of cure, &c. One application at night never fails to relieve the greatest pain and anguish. I am ready to refer to numerous individuals who have proved this Remedy to be the safest, surest, speediest and cheapest

CURE FOR THE PILES.

My agent in Exeter writes thus: "the Pile Remedy which you left me is all sold, please send me soon a further supply, as a number of persons in this town think very highly of it. N. GILMAN"

MORE TESTIMONY.

Salem, Aug. 6. Mr. Harrison: The box of ointment which I had from you has worked like a charm—I have used it only one night, and I am cured. I had used Hays' Liniment as I stated to you, with no benefit but rather was worse, it causing more inflammation. Yrs, J. W.

BLEEDING PILES CURED.

Mr. Harrison—Having given your Peristaltic Lozenges and Pile Remedy a fair trial, I have the satisfaction to inform you that they have operated wonderfully in my case. I had not been able for months to do any work at my trade, owing to exhaustion from bleeding, but I now feel myself cured. The severe pain which I had in my stomach is gone, and my strength is fast returning. I had used various remedies to no purpose, until I tried your medicine. I can also state that Capt. Benj. Ireson of this town has also experienced great benefit from your Remedy. I cheerfully recommend the medicine to all suffering with that distressing complaint—the Piles.

POETRY.

YIELD NOT TO DARK DESPAIR.

Hast thou one heart that loves thee,
In this dark world of care,
Whose gentle smile approves thee?
Yield not to dark despair!

One rose whose fragrant blossom
Blooms but for thee alone—
One fond, confiding bosom
Whose thoughts are all thine own?—

One gentle star to guide thee,
And bless thee on thy way,
That e'en when storms betide thee,
Still lends it gentle ray?—

One chrystal fountain springing
Within life's dreariest waste,
Whose waters still are bringing
Refreshments to thy taste?—

One tuneful voice to cheer thee,
When sorrow has distressed—
One breast when thou art weary,
Whereon thy head to rest?—

Till that sweet rose is faded,
And cold that heart so warm;
Till clouds that star above thee shaded,
Heed not the passing storm!

Till the kind voice that blest thee,
All mute in death doth be,
And the fount that oft refreshed thee
To thee is ever dry,

Thou hast one tie to bind thee
To this dark world of care;
Then let no sorrow blind thee—
Yield not to dark despair!

HYMN TO THE DEAD.

We've arrayed thee for the bridal,
We have decked thee for the tomb;
O'er the orange tree and myrtle
The cypress casts its gloom.
The peals that told thy bridal hour,
Thy 'passing bells' have been;
Thou, the life-breath of our circle,
Thou art lost to us—Irene!

We've arrayed thee for the bridal,
We have decked thee for the grave;
The shroud now clasps thee coldly,
While the snow-white veil should wave.
Too pure, too beautiful, for earth
Thy loveliness has been;
Thou art flown to paradise,
Though lost to us—Irene!

SELECTED TALES.

THRIFT:

OR NOTHING IS USELESS.

John Schmid was an old soldier with a wooden leg; he was so poor, that for some years he was obliged to solicit alms from door to door in the villages near to that in which he lived which was situated on the lake of Constance. Now, however, old John Schmid sits at ease in his arm chair; he is in independent circumstances; yet few people guess how he came by his wealth. One affirms that he discovered a secret treasure; others have gone so far as to hint that he made a compact with the Evil One. When such hints are dropped in my presence, I fail not to reprove the speakers. I know better the means by which the soldier got rich, and I will tell you how it was.

John Schmid had three sons, whom he had brought up well in spite of his poverty; for he not only furnished them with good advice but with a good example, and suffered many privations that he might send them to school. One morning in spring, as the old man was dividing amongst them the bread which was to break their fasts, he said, "My children you are now old enough to gain your own livelihood; but you must not beg while there are other means of obtaining it—that would be taking bread out of the mouths of those who want it more than you. Pierre," he continued, turning to the eldest, "you are fourteen years old, and have sharp eyes—use them to seek employment. You, Gabriel, though a year younger, have strong arms—set them to work. You, George, though only eleven years, have stout legs—profit by them."

"But what," exclaimed the three boys at once, "would you have us to do?"

John Schmid answered, "I know that you have neither land to cultivate, wood to fell, nor flocks to tend; but there are many things thrown away as useless, but which with a little industry may be collected and made profitable. By and by I will show you how. Do not spend the money which you will earn in obedience to your wants, but economize it for the necessities of the future, be it ever so little. Could you save only a batz a day, each would amass at the end of the year, twenty-four florins!"

Upon this John Schmid set about showing his sons how they might earn their bread. He desired them to go in different directions to collect the following articles: first, bones, the largest of which they could sell to the turners, who made them into various useful and ornamental articles, while the smaller were required by farmers for manure. Secondly, pieces of broken glass, to be disposed of to the glass workers for re-casting.—As it was spring, he charged them to get together all the rose-leaves and elder blossoms which fell in their way, and for which apothecaries give good prices. He also reminded his sons that by a little inquiry the chemists would point out what other plants and roots they required. Upholsterers would purchase cows' hair, saddlers, coach makers, and chair makers, horse hair. Besides these articles, he mentioned rags for paper makers, bristles for brush manufacturers, quills, pins, hedgewood, birdweed, and several other things which might be turned into money with no other trouble than that of seeking out and collecting them.

The sons did as they were desired, under the guidance of their father. During the spring and summer they collected and sold with such success, that their profits daily augmented.

When autumn came, they sought things of a different kind. Wherever they could obtain permission they gathered wild fruits, sone of which could be made into vinegar and other useful articles. From the woods they obtained quantities of acorns and the seeds of other species of trees, for which they obtained a good price sometimes from foresters, at others from grain dealers.—They also got together heaps of horse chesnuts, and took them to the mill to be ground. The miller thought they were going to eat this bitter flour, and made himself merry at the expense of their curious taste; but John Schmid's sons let him laugh, and took their horse-chesnut flour to to the bookbinders, cardboard-makers, and others who make use of paste, the glutinousness of which it increases. Immediately after a warm shower, the young Schmids sought for mushrooms which they disposed of to the epicures of the neighborhood.

Having saved a quantity of birch twigs, rushes, and osiers, the old man and his sons occupied the winter months in making brooms, chair bottoms, and baskets, so that their cottage appeared both like a ware-house and a workshop. In this way the spring returned, and old John Schmid thought it advisable to see what had been gained during the year. On opening the box in which the cash had been deposited, he found that each of his three sons had contributed more than a batz a day of savings, for the money box contained 194 fiorins and 23 kreutzers. At the sight of the hoard the sons were delighted, for they had never before seen so large a sum at once. John Schmid immediately carried the money to a wholesale tradesman in a large town, and deposited it with him at interest.

John Schmid, now no longer a beggar, employed himself solely in helping his sons to sell off the merchandize they collected. This went on four years, at the end of which the family had amassed 614 florins! As however, their riches increased, the young men grew independent in their manners, and disputed amongst themselves; one accusing the other of not working hard enough, of selling too cheaply, or of extravagance in treating himself to a cup of wine rather too often. Poor old Schmid!—do all he could, he was unable on some occasions to settle these discussions.

Nothing seemed likely to cure the evil but separation; and addressing his sons, he said.

"Take each of you one hundred florins, and seek your fortunes in the world; industry and economy always prosper. The rest of the capital shall remain in the hands of the banker, in case that any unforseen misfortune should fall, on any of us so as to need it. But while it remains untouched, the interest will be added to the principal." To this the young men agreed; and taking each his apportioned sum, bade adieu to their father. They took their departure, each in a different direction. Pierre went eastward, Gabriel westward, and George towards the south. John Schmid grieved to part with his children; but he knew it was for their good, and bore his regrets in silence.

Years rolled on. John Schmid grew old and weak, but he would not touch a kreutzer of his children's capital. At length he fell ill, and some of his neighbors, pitying his lonely state, sent him relief; others declared that they had poor enough of their own to support, and though he had lived in their village for twenty-one years, threatened to send him away as a stranger. Upon this old John wrote to the merchant who held the money, saying, "Send me three hundred florins of the capital I deposited in your hands; for I am aged and weak, and for fourteen years I have not heard of my children. Doubtless they are dead. It will not be long ere I follow them to the grave."

The honest merchant promptly replied to the old man's demand. "I return you," he wrote, "the sum you ask. The balance remaining is perhaps greater than you imagine. It has increased, little by little, to more than 1000 florins."

When the money arrived, the peasant stared with wonder, and declared that John Schmid must be a conjuror. But the old man himself, in spite of his riches, was unhappy. He wished to join his sons whom he thought to be no more. He would often exclaim, "I shall die in solitude, no son is left to close my eyes." However, he recovered from his illness, and it was destined that he should not die alone.

One Sunday evening he was seated with other peasants under a linden tree, when a servant on horseback rode up, and inquired if any one could direct him to the cottage of John Schmid? The villagers, full of astonishment, replied, "You need not see him in his house, for he is here.,' As they stared and whispered inquiringly to one another as to what was to come next, two handsome carriages entered the village, and stopped before old Schmid's door. Three well-dressed gentlemen and two ladies descended from the coaches, and as John made his appearance, threw themselves successively into his arms. "My dear father," said the eldest, "can it be possible that you have forgotten us? I am Pierre. I have become a wholesale grocer at Vassovie, in Poland, and this lady is my wife. Then the second spoke: "I am your son Gabriel, and also bring you a daughter-in-law. I, too, reside at Vassovie, and deal in corn."

Presently the third son came forward. "I, he said, am George. I have recently returned from India, where I made a fortune by commerce.—Seeing, by the Gazettes that my brothers were in Poland, I joined them, and we all agreed to travel hither to seek you and to make you happy for the rest of your life.', Poor John Schmid was quite overcome and shed tears. He invoked blessings on his children. "To you," exclaimed one of them, "we owe all our good fortune. Had you not taught us that nothing, be it ever so despised, is useless—had you not made us industrious, persevering, and economical, we should still have been mendicants."

The rest of John Schmid's life was spent in happiness, for one or other of his sons always remained with him. The money, which had accumulated during their long absence, was drawn from the merchant in whose hands it had so much increased, and employed in building a school for the gratuitous education of poor children."

To those, who like me, were aware of the means by which the Schmids grew rich, their rise in the world is known to be the certain result of integrity, industry and perseverance in turning to account things generally considered useless.—Spite, however, of all I can urge, one or two of the more prejudiced villagers shrug their shoulders when John Schmid's name is mentioned, and insinuate that he must have made a compact with a certain nameless person.

MISCELLANY.

GETTING MARRIED.

Dow Jr., the inimitable preacher of the New York Sunday Mercury, thus discourses on getting married. It is said he is about to enter the holy estate of wedlock.

"Young man! if you have arrived at the right point in life for it, let every other consideration give way to that of getting married. Don't think of doing anything else. Keep poking about among the rubbish of the world till you have stirred up a gem worth possessing, in the shape of a wife. Never think of delaying the matter; for you know that delays are dangerous. A good wife is the most constant and faithful companion you can possibly have by your side, while performing the journey of life—a dog isn't a touch to her.—She is of more service too, than you may at first imagine. She can "smoothe your linen and your cares" for you—mend your trousers, and perchance your manners—sweeten your sour moments as well as your tea and coffee for you—ruffle, perhaps, your shirt bosom, but not your temper;—and, instead of sowing the seeds of sorrow in your path, she will sew buttons on your shirts, and plant happiness instead of harrow teeth in your bosom. Yes—and if you are too confoundedly lazy or too proud to do such work yourself, she will chop wood, and dig potatoes for dinner; for her love for her husband is such that she will do anything to please him—except receive company in her every-day clothes. When a woman loves, it is with a double distilled devotedness; when she hates, she hates on the high-pressure principle.—Her love is as deep as the ocean, and strong as an hempen halter, and as immutable as the rock of ages. She won't change it, except it is in a very strong fit of jealousy; and even then it lingers, as if loth to part, like evening twilight at the windows of the west. Get married by all means.—All the excuses you can fish against "doing the deed," ain't worth a spoonful of pigeon's milk.—Mark this—If blest with health and employment you are not able to support a wife, depend upon it you are not capable of supporting yourself.—Therefore, so much the more need of annexation; for in union, as well as an onion, there is strength. Get married, I repeat, young man! Concentrate your affections upon one object, and not distribute them crumb by crumb, among a host of Susans, Sarahs, Loranas, Marys, Olives, Elizas, Augustas, Betsies, Gerushas, Peggies, and Dorathies—allowing each scarcely enough to nibble at. Get married, and have somebody to cheer you as you journey through this "lowly vale of tears"—somebody to scour up your dull melancholy moments, and keep your whole life, and whatever linen you possess, in some sort of Sunday-go-to-meeting order.

Young woman! I need not tell you to look out for your husband, for I know you are as naturally on the watch as a cat is for a mouse. But one word in your ear if you please. Don't bait your hook with an artificial fly of beauty; if you do, the chances are ten to one that you will catch a gudgeon—some silly fool of a fish that isn't worth his weight in saw-dust. Array the inner lady with the beautiful garments of virtue, modesty, truth, morality, wisdom, and unsophisticated love; and you will dispose of yourself quicker and to much better advantage than if you displayed all the gewgaws, tipperjigs, fol-de-rols, and fiddledeedees in the universe. Remember that it is an awful thing to live and die a selfmanufactured old maid.

My hearers—get married while you are young; and then when the frosts of age shall fall and wither the flowers of affection, the leaves of connubial love will still be green; and perchance a joyous offspring will surround and grace the parent tree, like ivy twining and adorning the time scathed oak."

KICKING A YANKEE.

A very handsome friend of ours, who a few weeks since, was poked out of a comfortable office up the river, has betaken himself to Bangor, for a time, to recover from the wound inflicted upon his feeling by our "unprincipled and immolating administration."

Change of air must have had an instant effect upon his spirits, for from Galena, he writes us an amusing letter, which, among other things, tells of a desperate quarrel that took place on board of the boat between a real live dandy tourist, and a real live yankee settler. The latter trod upon the toes of the former; whereupon the former threatened to "kick out of the cabin" the latter.

"You'll kick me out of this cabing?

"Yes sir, I'll kick you out of this cabin."

"You'll kick me, Mr. Hitchcock, out of this eabing?"

'Yes sir, I'll kick you, Mr. Hitchcock!'

'Well, I guess,' said the yankee, very coolly, after being perfectly satisfied that it was himself who stood in imminent peril of being assaulted—'I guess since you talk of kicking,' you've never heard me tell about old Bradley and my mare, there to hum?'

'No sir, nor do I wish——'

'Wal, guess it won't set you back much, any how, as kicking's generally best to be considered on. You see, old Bradley is one of these sanctimonious long-faced hypocrites, who put on a religious suit every Sunday morning, and with a good deal of screwing, manage to keep it on till after sermon in the afternoon. Wal, he had an old roan mare that would jump over any sixteen rail fence in Illinois, and open any barn that had n't a padlock on it. Two or three times I found her in my stable, and I told Bradley about it, and he was 'very sorry'—'unruly animal'—would watch her, and a hul lot of such things, all said in a very serious manner, and with a face twice as long as old Deacon Farrar's on Sabbath day.—I knew all the time he was lying, so I watched him, and his old roan tu; and for three nights regular, old roan came to my stable about bed time, and just about day light Bradley would come, bridle her and ride off. I then just took my old mare down to the blacksmith's shop, and had some shoes made with 'corks' about four inches long, and had 'em nailed on to her hind feet.—Your heels, mister, aint nothing to 'em.

'I took her hum, gave her about ten feet halter, and tied her right in the centre of the stable, fed her well with oats about nine oclock, and after taking a good smoke, went to bed, knowing that my old mare was a truth-telling animal, and that she'd give a good report of herself in the morning. I hadn't got fairly to sleep before the old woman hunched me and wanted to know what on airth was the matter out at the stable.—Says I, go to sleep, Peggy, it is nothing but Kate,—she's kicking off the flies, I guess. Purty soon she hunched me agin, and says she, Mr. Hitchcock, du get up and see what is the matter with Kate, for she is kicking most powerfully. 'Lay still, Peggy, Kate will take care of herself, I guess.' Wal, next mornin' about daylight, Bradley, with bridle in hand, cum to the stable, and as true as the book of Genesis, when he saw old roan's sides, starn and head, he cussed and swore worse than you did, when I cum down on your toes.

'Arter breakfast that mornin,' Joe Davis cum to my house, and says he, 'Bradley's roan is nearly dead—she's all cut to pieces, and can scarcely move.' 'I want to know!' says I, 'how on airth did it happen!' Now whilst we were talkin,' up cum that everlastin' hypocrite Bradley, and says he, 'Mr. Hitchcock, my old roan is ruined!' 'Du tell!' says I. 'She is cut all to pieces,' says he; 'do you know whether she was in your stable, last night?' With this I let out: 'Do I know it?'—the yankee here, in illustrating, made an advance upon the dandy, who made way for him unconsciously, as it were—'Do I knew it, you no-souled, squash-headed, old night owl, you! you hay-hookin', corn-cribbin', fodder-fudgin', cent-shavin', whittling of nothin', you? Kate kicks like a dumb beast, but I've reduced the thing to a science!' The yankee had not ceased to advance, or the dandy, in his astonishment to retreat; and now, the motion of the latter being accelerated by an apparent demonstration on the part of the former to 'suit the action to the word,' he found himself in the 'social hall,' tumbling backward over a pile of baggage, and tearing the knees of his pants as he scrambled up, a perfect scream of laughter stunning him from all sides. The defeat was total; a few moments afterwards he was seen dragging his own trunk ashore, while Mr. Hitchcock finished his story on the boiler-deck.

A Man grown by Guano and Electricity.—The New Haven Courier tells the following capital story;

A citizen of this place, while recently on a tour pin the State of New York, was induced to make one of the audience of an itinerant lecturer who was holding forth upon the efficacy of electricity as applied to vegetable productions.

In the course of his harangue, Guano was incidentally alluded to as a powerful agent in quickening the growth of plants, and the effects of both were displayed in such glowing language that the auditory soon imagined themselves standing in the midst of a field and endeavoring to measure the height of the grain, before it was out of reach. The whole assembly were in a fine state of enthusiasm, and swallowed down the wonders revealed to them with opened mouths and starting eyes, when a plain looking old farmer arose, and, with apparently much diffidence, begged leave to confirm the lecturer's statements, by the relation of an incident which he had recently witnessed, and to which he was a party.

"I have," said he, "a very bad boy, named Tommy; he's given us a good deal of trouble, and having tried various methods to reform him without success, I told my wife that it would be best to try something that was new and rather more severe.

Accordingly we agreed to shut him up at night in the barn. This answered very well for a while, but he grew worse again. till finally I was obliged to shut him up in the barn every night by sundown.

Well, one night while Tommy was roosting with the cattle, and I was in bed, there came on a tremendous thunder storm. It lightened sharp enough to put out a man's eyes, and thundered so loud that it made the house rattle like a snare drum. Feeling rather uneasy about the boy, I got up early in the morning and went out to see how he fared. As I was going to the barn, I met a man most eight feet high coming towards me.—I never had seen such a tall critter in all my life before, and I begun to feel sort of scarible at having him abont my premises.

"Hollo," says I, as soon as I could speak, "who are you? and what are you doing in my barnyard?"

The strange looking animal answered in a tle squeaking child's voice, "Why father, it's don't you know Tommy?"

"You?" says I; "why, Tom how on earth you get stretched out so long in one night? you've grown as tall as all out doors, don't know it?

"Why, yes, father," says he, "I s'pose I for last night I slept on them bags of Guano put in the barn, and that and the lightning did business."

The effect of this story upon the audience indeed electric. Peal upon peal of laughter lowed, the people went off every way, and next day the lecturer upon guano and electr was among the missing.

Poisonous properties of Cherry leaves. We frequently heard of animals being destroyed eating the leaves of the wild cherry, and pres the foliage of the common 'tame cherry' to l qually fatal. Not long since we saw it state one of our exchanges, that a farmer in Massa setts had lost a valuable cow in consequence was supposed, of her having eaten the leaves cherry tree that had been blown down by a storm.

It is wrong policy to permit sprouts around tree. An hour's labor will be found amply sufficient to free any orchard of this superfluous vegetation; and as there is danger of its being eaten by valuable animals, it is the duty of every farmer to see that it is destroyed before it produces fatal results. Accidents, like the latter, cannot always be avoided; but where trees send up surculous sprouts from the roots, there should be no time lost in cutting them; they are an injury to the tree, and can never be of any advantage in any way.—Maine Cultivator.

Mange. This is a cutaneous disease. It is contagious, for in a large flock, if one animal is taken with it, it is seldom that any escape. Its appearance is indicated by a scurf on the skin, attended with itching and inflammation, causing an inclination in the animal affected to rub. Some contend that it is occasioned by a kind of animalcule which lodges in the skin, usually attacking those animals that are thin and low in the flesh.

In order effectually to cure this troublesome disease, it is necessary in the first place thoroughly to eradicate the scurf, after which the following application may be made, and repeated every two or three days till the cure is effected.

Spirits of Turpentine 3-4 pint,
Sulphur (flowers) 3-4 lb.
Train oil sufficient to make the above, when mixed, into a thin paste.—Maine Cultivator.

Bold as a Lion. One of the best jokes of the season is told by the amiable Gaines, of tonsorial notoriety. A Southern Adonis, no way celebrated for his personal attraction, on completing somewhat protracted toilet one morning turned to his servant and inquired—

'How do I look Cæsar?'

'Plendid, massa, plendid!' was ebony's delightful answer.

'Do you think I'll do Cæsar? (Giving him a piece of silver.)

'Guy, Massa, nebber see you look so fierce in all my life; you look jist as bold as a lion.

'Why what do you know about a lion? you never saw one Cæsar.'

'Nebber see a lion, Massa! Guy I see Mass Peyton's Jim ride one ober to the mill ebery day.

'No, you fool, thar's a donkey.'

Can't help dat, Massa—you look jis like him!

Books.—It is chiefly through books that we enjoy intercourse with superior minds, and these in valuable means of communication are in the reach of all. In the best books, great men talk to us, give us their most precious thonghts, and pour their souls into ours. God be thanked for books. They are the voices of the distant and the dead, and make us heirs of the spiritual life of past ages. Books are the true levellers. They give to all who will faithfully use them the society the spiritual presence, of the best and greatest of our race. No matter how poor I am, no matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter my obscure dwelling, if the sacred writers will enter and take up their abode under my roof, if Milton will cross my threshhold to sing to me of Paradise, and Shakspeare to open to me the worlds of imagination and the workings of the human heart, and Franklin to enrich me with his practical wisdom, I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship; and I may become a cultivated man, although excluded from what is called the best society in the place where I live.—Channing.

A Beautiful Idea.—At a public meeting in New York says the Telegraph, Rev. J. Spalding dwelt a few moments on the deathless nature and extent of moral influence. "Away among the Alleghanies," said he, "there is a spring so small that a single ox on a summer's day could drain it dry. It steals its unobtrusive way among the hills, till it spreads out into the beautiful Ohio. Thence it stretches away a thousand miles, leaving on its banks more than a hundred villages and cities, and many thousand cultivated farms; and bearing on its bosom more than half a thousand steamboats. Then joining the Mississippi, it stretches away and away some twelve hundred miles more, till it falls into the great emblem of eternity. It is one of the tributaries of that ocean, which obedient only to God, shall roll and roar till the angel with one foot on the sea and the other on the land, shall lift up his hand to heaven and swear that time shall be no longer. So with moral influence. It is a rill—a rivulet—a river—an ocean, boundless and fathomless as eternity."—Madison Express.

COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION IN NEW YORK.

We have recently received a number of the New York District School Journal, a periodical devoted to the interests of the public Schools of that state, which contains much valuable information in relation to the workings of their School System. From what we gather by an examination of this number, as well as what we had previously learned, we are compelled to admit that our sister state is far in advance of our own Commonwealth in its system of management, and its liberality in support of public education.

In New York they have a State Superintendent of Schools, answering in many respects to our Secretary of the Board of Education, and this officer is assisted by County Superintendents, each county having at least one, and the larger counties two. Then there are Town Superintendents having the oversight of the different Districts in each town, like our town Committees; and lastly a Trustee of each School District, performing the duties usually assigned to our Prudential Committees. We cannot but regard the appointment of County Superintendents, whose duties in their several bounds shall be similar to those expected of the State Secretary, as essential to the perfection of our educational System. The duties now belonging to the Secretary of the Board are too many and too arduous without the assistance of intermediate agents between him and town committees. We hope the Legislature will see that this much needed reform is effected.

New York also surpasses Massachusetts in the liberal encouragement and support of that indispensable auxiliary to a successful Common School System—the Normal Schools. It has established one of these Institutions at Albany, and we are proud to say that its Principal, DAVID P. PAGE, Esq. is a gentlemen from this state, and from Essex County where he has for a long time enjoyed a high reputation as a successful teacher. His reputation was not confined to his own County or State, but extended abroad over the country.—Such talents and fitness for the responsible situation of taking the lead in a new institution of this kind, did not escape the vigilance and observation of the Executive Committee of Schools in the Empire State. The most untiring and at last successful efforts were made to secure his services and the school is now in a highly successful progress. The state has been liberal in its endowments, and has adopted an admirable system for supplying the school with suitable pupils from all parts of the state. All male pupils must have attained the age of 18 years, and females 16 years, and one half of the whole are STATE PUPILS. A certain number from each county, of the best scholars are selected and recommended by the County Superintendent for their attainments and good moral character. These State Pupils receive from the public treasury a stated allowance equal to about half their board. The voluntary pupils are also recommended by their Superintendent, and thus the very elite in talent of all the schools in the state are the candidates for instruction as teachers of the Public Schools. Massachusetts should lose no time in establishing such a school which shall be the West Point of the state, only in a better sense—in the selection and education of her sons for the profession of Teachers of youth.—The Journal contains a catalogue of 215 pupils who are under the instruction of the Principal, a Professor of Mathematics, another of Vocal Music, and a third, of Drawing. Nine of the more advanced pupils have been employed as tutors or assistants in the School. An Experimental School is also to be attached to the Seminary, in which an opportunity will be afforded for the application of the principles of government and instruction received in the Normal School.

In this number we see notices of the meeting of twenty-three County Institutes or Teachers' Associations, and appointments for meetings where the Principal is expected to be present, extending through the month of September and part of October, occupying every day of his time during that period. These Institutes are similar to our Essex County Teachers' Association, and serve to awaken much public interest on the subject of education. We see it stated by the Superintendent of Tompkins County, that "the first Teachers' Institute in the State and probably in the world, was opened at that place on the 4th day of April, 1843. We think our County Teachers' Association can lay claim to much greater antiquity, and we should like to see from some competent source a public statement of its origin and history.

It was our intention to have made further remarks on the interesting statements of this Journal to show that unless our Commonwealth shall be up and doing, there is danger that she may be left far behind her sister state in the race for educational improvement. We may resume the subject in another paper.

☞Mr. Samuel Colt, the inventor of quite a number of improvements in fire arms, has recently invented a tin-cartridge, which has preference over others, on account of its leaving the gun perfectly clean after firing; without the possibility of its retaining fire, to cause a premature explosion.

WHIG STATE CONVENTION.

We wish to remind our Whig friends that the Convention for the nomination of State Officers will be held at Faneuil Hall, on Wednesday the 24th inst, at 10 o'clock A. M., and that the State Central Committee invite towns to send delegates equal to three times the number of Representatives they are entitled to send to General Court. Danvers will be entitled according to this rule to Six seats in the Convention. The Chairman of our Town Committee will, no doubt, soon call a meeting for the choice of delegates, and we hope such men will be chosen as feel a lively interest in the success of Whig principles, and those who will not fail to be present during the sitting of the Convention.

IRON FOUNDRY.

A writer in the Salem Gazette calls loudly for the establishments of an Iron Foundry, in that village. We can inform the inhabitants of that place that they can be accommodated with superior iron castings on application to the Foundry of Mr. Mathew Hooper, the enterprising proprietor of the establishment in this town formerly known as the "Salem Iron Factory."

To Readers and Correspondents.—We are reluctantly compelled to defer to our next paper the communication of 'Truth' which was unavoidably postponed from our last. We are also obliged to divide the communication of our correspondent "F.," the first part of which may be found in another place, as the publication of the whole would occupy so much space as to deprive the reader of the usual variety on the inside. We would respectfully suggest to our correspondents who have, with so much ability, sustained their peculiar and opposite views on the Rail Road question whether the public interest would be likely to be promoted by a further discussion of the subject at this time. We do not object to its continuance in our columns for any other reason than the large space it of necessity occupies, to the exclusion of matter of more general interest, and we must in future, unless in extraordinary cases, limit these articles to one column on the inside.

Military. The Lowell City Guards, Capt Townsend, are now on a tour of camp duty in Salem. They arrived there on Thursday afternoon, about four o'clock, and were received by the Salem Light Infantry whose guests they will be during their stay. They were entertained by the S. L. I. in the following manner. On Thursday with a supper, at which there were several invited guests, amongst whom were the Adjutant General, Col. Andrews, the officers of the Salem Mechanic L. Infantry and also of the Salem Artillery. Yesterday they were provided with a dinner, and last evening they were entertained by a Levee at Mechanic Hall. They will be provided with a breakfast, this morning, and will depart for Lowell about noon.

C. EDWARDS LESTER, author of "The Glory and Shame of England," and an efficient United States Consul at Genoa, is making honorable use of his leisure by exploring the rich mine of Italian literature which his residence in that country places within his reach. Several admirable translations of Italian works of high character, have recently appeared from his pen—works which have only needed an English face to recommend themselves by their exalted merit to the extensive perusal of our countrymen. Mr. Lester has, we think, shown himself capable of performing good service by supplying in a measure this deficiency, and we hope the reception of his works will be such as to encourage him to persevere in his laudable undertaking. Of "The Medici Series of Italian Prose," as these productions are termed by the translator, The Challenge of Barletta—a Romance, and the Florentine Histories of MACHIAVELLI, one of the boasts of his country's literature, have already appeared and others are about issuing from the press. We have been much interested in the perusal of the Histories, the subject of which under the treatment of a much less gifted mind than Machiavelli's, could not have failed to secure popularity.—Its author was for fifteen years Secretary of the Florentine republic, and in other public offices acquitted himself with distinguished honor, and his experience in public affairs joined to his vigorous intellect, admirably qualified him for the part of historian of his country, especially of his own times. In Italy his work has ever been in high repute as a faithful and spirited narrative of the exciting events which constitute the History of Florence.

ORDINATION. Mr. EBENEZER DODGE, Jr., of Salem, a graduate of the Newton Theological Institution, was yesterday ordained as a Minister of the Gospel, at the First Baptist Church in Salem.

☞We learn from the Newburyport Herald, that it is in contemplation to run a steamboat on the Merrimack between that town and Haverhill, and that one half of the stock has already been taken by a few persons; it is thought the remainder will soon be disposed of.

Miss Virginia, daughter of Major General Scott who retired to the Roman Catholic convent, at Georgetown, last year, died on Tuesday of last week. She was in the 24th year of her age.

Excitement in the Navy Yard We learn that active preparations are making at the Navy Yard in Charlestown, for the expected rupture with the government of Mexico, by the fitting out of several vessels of War.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.

The Royal Mail Steamship Caledonia arrived at Boston on Wednesday morning, bringing London and Liverpool papers to the 19th of August. The following are among the items of news.

The fears of a bad harvest in England, so loudly expressed at the last advices, it appears have been fully realized. The weather continued unsettled, and all eyes were turned to the U. States and Canada for a supply of bread-stuffs.

Switzerland continues to be in a very unsettled state and further ruptures are expected.

The session of Parliament has closed—the Queen has winged her way to the Continent—the members of both Houses are flying over the country.

Mr. McLane has delivered his credentials to the Queen and Mr. Everett his letters of recall.—The American ambassador was anxious to enter upon the object of his mission instanter, but as Lord Aberdeen had arranged to accompany the Queen to Germany, the commencement of negotiations was postponed.

Charles Dickens has returned from Italy. It is rumored that he will immediately bring out "Letters from Italy."

Many of the great towns in England—Leeds, Glasgow, Manchester and Liverpool, for example continue mad with the excitement of rail-way speculation. In the first named place the police have been obliged to be called in to keep the approaches to the stock-market clear.

Her Majesty has at length set out upon her long projected visit to Germany.

The great Orange demonstration took place a Eniskillen on the 12th inst. There were eight or ten thousand on the ground, for the purpose ef declaring their hatred or Popery and their utter repudiation of Repeal.

Mr. O'Connell is rusticating at Darryname.—He has sent a missive to the Repeal Association which rings the parliamentary knell of some of the most able and accomplished Irish members in the British Parliament. Sheil, Wyse, Serjeant Murphy, id nue omnes, have in this missive, received their political death warrants.

The declaration of war by Mexico against the United States, is the great point discussed in the Paris papers. La Presse regards that act as a peurile demonstration.

Fanny Ellsler, the charming dansuese, so idolised in the United States, has bought a delightful residence on the banks of Lake Como.—Taglioni has also a residence in the same beautiful spot, and the immortal Pasta has resided there for years.

☞Hon. Mr. Bragg of Milford, formerly a Senator from Worcester county, in the Legislature, has had the misfortune to lose one of his eyes.—A piece of a nail, which he was driving into a box, flew off and hit his eye, causing its loss.

THE NEXT CONGRESS.—The Journal of Commerce classifies and arranges the 20th Congress from the 4th of March last. When full it will comprise 278 members, 54 Senators and 225 Representatives. According to its calculation there will be a democratic majority of six in the Senate, and also of 42 in the House.

☞Orrin De Wolf, under sentence of death, in the Worcester jail, for the murder of William Stiles has had his sentence commuted by the Governor and Council, to imprisonment for life in the State prison. The history of the case is briefly this,—It appears that De Wolf and the wife of Stiles had formed a criminal connection. She was much younger than her husband Stiles was worth fifteen hundred dollars, and it was to get possession of this property, by marrying Mrs. Stiles, that De Wolf was induced to commit the murder. The confession of De Wolf renders it certain that Mrs Stiles had a knowledge of the intention of De Wolf to murder her husband, and that she approved of it. The evidence given in the trial, fixed the guilt strongly upon the prisoner. He also made a confession of it to the Sheriff, but tried to implicate another individual as accessory. A letter also written by the prisoner was detected, in which the facts of the murder were confessed.—Salem Gazette.

LOSS OF THE BANGOR The new propeller steam ship Bangor, which has been the object of so much comment in the newspapers is destroyed thus early in her career. The Atlas says she left Boston on Saturday afternoon, for the Penobscot, with 34 passengers, and freight valued at $200,000. On Sunday, about 4 o'clock, P. M., she took fire in a bulk-head near the boiler, and the flames spreading with great rapidity, she was run ashore at Islesboro', on the East end of Long Island, about seven miles below Castine. The passengers and crew all got safely on shore, and the greater part of the baggage was saved. All the freight and the consumable part of the boat was destroyed. It is supposed that there was no insurance, either on the boat or freight.

Lieut. Foss, of the revenue cutter Veto, which was lying at Castine, immediately proceeded with the cutter to the assistance of the Bangor, and bro't the passengers back to Castine.

TWO LADIES, from Boston, who were bathing at an inlet on Plum Island, on Munday afternoon, had a narrow escape from drowning. One of them having fallen down, the other attempted to get her upon the beach, and in the attempt both were carried out beyond their depth. The daughter of one of the ladies, (Mrs. Oakes of Boston,) about thirteen years of age, who was with them, with great presence of mind immediately put on the life preserver which she had with her, and (having practised at Braman's baths in Boston,) being an expert swimmer, boldly swam out to them, and succeeded in drawing them both ashore. One of the ladies she was compelled to draw through the water by the hair of her head. The ladies were so much exhausted as to require medical attendance.—Newburyport Herald.

Close of the Financial Year.—The receipts of the American Board for the financial year which terminated July 31, from all sources, were $255,112. The expenditures during the same period, together with the debt of the previous year, were $237,817. The balance on hand, therefore, at the commencement of the new year, was $17,292. The excess of the receipts of the past year over those of the preceding year, is owing to the unusually large amount of the legacies. The income from this source in 1842 amouted to $16,44; while in 1844–5 it has been $32,427.

The state of the treasury at the present time is peculiarly gratifying, inasmuch as a number of persons are under appointment, who are expecting to go out as missionaries in the course of a few weeks.—Missionary Herald, for Sept.

Virginia Corn Crop.—The Richmond Whig says that while particular counties and neighborhoods will fall short of an adequate supply of corn, the aggregate crop in Virginia, in conjunction with large supplies of the old crop which still remain on hand, especially below tide water, will not only be ample for home consumption, but yield a large surplus for coast transportation.—"West of the Blue Ridge, and East of the falls of the rivers," adds the Whig, "the corn crop is believed to be an average one. In many of the midland counties it will fall short. The wonder is that so much should have been made in defiance of so unprecedented a drought. It speaks well for the improved methods of cultivation. Twenty years ago such a drought would scarcely have allowed seed corn to be raised,"

We regret that the same cannot be said of the corn crop in South Carolina.

☞At a meeting of the Board of School Committee on Tuesday evening, Mr. Joseph Williams jr., of Newburyport was elected Principal of the Phillips' School in this city. Mr. Williams has been for some time the Principal of one of the Grammar Schools in Newburyport, and comes to our city with a very high reputation as an Instructor, which we doubt not from his past success, he will fully sustain in his new situation.

The other vacancies in the list of Teachers were not filled.—Salem Register.

Elder Himes delivered his farewell sermon in the Miller Tabernacle, Boston, on Sunday last, and at the close gave notice, with tears in his eyes, that the building would be appropriated to other uses than public worship. We understand the building is to be metamorphosed into an opera house and concert room, and that workmen will forthwith commence fitting it up for the purpose above named. "The sceptre has departed from Judah."—Eagle

Rather Tough.—The Picayune has a story of a rattlesnake which swallowed a field mouse or mole, and repeated the operation twice, the mole each time eating his way out, and finally killing the snake. The public are expected to swallow both mole and serpent.

Mystery Again.—The New York Sun of Saturday morning says that the body of a young woman was found Friday, near the Coney Island House. That paper says, also that she must have been a victim to violence of some kind, from the fact that she was buried in her ordinary dress, and apparently hurried into her grave with the greatest rapidity.

Milk Sickness;—Thos. S. Hinde, of Illinois, has published an address to the governor and members of the legislatures of western States and territories, in which he makes known that he has established, after more than thirty years close examination, and trying, successfully, experiments the real cause producing what is called milk sickness, or puking complaint, so prevalent in many portions of the West. For this discovery premiums have been offered, and he has applied for them. The detection of the shrub enables the inhabitants of the afflicted region to avoid its evils.

LIFE IN NEW ORLEANS.—The Picayune give the following sketch of life in New Orleans during dog days:

"Well, here we are in the ides of August, with a superfluity of sun and not the first symptom of an epidemic. Buildings are rising and the river is falling; the thermometer is about 93; the Mexican war fever still higher; musuetoes are busy as bees, and at the present time much more numerous than suckers; business is as dull as the woman's knife that would not cut butter unless it was heated, and cheese (the only thing retaining a due degree of animation) is as lively as a party of Highland dancers. Business, as business, is at a perfect stand-still; whilst the ladies, having divested themselves of their stays and relinquished tight-lacing, are 'going it' in gowns 'with a perfect looseness.'"

The Millerites of Providence have become such disturbers of the peace that it was found necessary last week to arrest the ringleaders; the more prominent members were accordingly sent to the watch-house.

☞It is stated in the newspapers that "the Salem Quarterly meeting of Orthodox Friends divided into two bodies at its last quarterly meeting, held at Lynn, 20th ult.'

CERTAIN CURE FOR CHOLIC.—We have authority upon which we place full reliance, for saying that a tablespoon full of Bear's Oil will give, in space of ten minutes, relief in the worst cases of Cholic.— Albany Journal.

LARGE DIVIDEND. The State of Massachusetss has this day received a dividend of $30,000 on its shares in the Western Railroad. On the 20th February last it received a like amount, making the total sixty thousand dollars.—[Boston Transcript.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.—We learn that Edward Mellen Esq., of Wayland, has been nominated by the governor to the council for attorney for this district, in place of Asahel Huntington, resigned It is believed that Mr. Mellen will not accept the office.—Lowell Courier.

The License Law.—A letter received this morning from Concord, informs us "that the Common Pleas judges have determined to try and sentence all offenders against the license law." This is a wise determination.—Ibid.

Sickness of Judge Story. We regret to learn that Judge Story lies dangerously sick at Cambridge, with a sudden attack of bilious cholic. A gentleman who left Cambridge on Wednesday afternoon, states, that he had been considered at the point of death, but that in some respects the symptoms were rather more favorable; his situation, however, was extremely critical.

The Traveller states, that Judge Story had previously resigned his seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, to take effect next month.—Salem Reg.

Atlantic and St Lawrence Railroad. The Portland papers announce with great exultation that the subscription of the first million of the capital stock of the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Rail Road Company is completed, and that in compliance with the Charter, the Corporators have issued the call for the first meeting of the subscribers, for organization, to be held in Portland on Thursday 25th inst.

FOR THE COURIE

Mr. Editor—Your correspondent E. has, in last communication, made some reference to letter, which was published some weeks since your paper, but still withholds from the public real name, while he uses my own with a deg of freedom, hardly justifiable to my mind, *especi*ly as it is associated with insinuations and in*ences*, for no other purpose but to endeavor make the community believe that my course the Railroad question last Spring, was even ba and dishonorable.

E. says, "I suppose that we, the constituer of our Representatives, have a perfect right to e press our views as to the character of their pub acts in representing our interests."

I certainly do not deny this; but I do say, th because the public acts of an individual do n conform to the private interests of a few of h constituents, that they are not thereby licensed a wholesale abuse of his honor and integrity, a to indulge themselves over a fictitious signatur in villifying honest and justifiable actions.

I am well aware that the community generall know who my disputant is, who prefers ambus to an open field, and he is welcome to the India honor of a covert warfare.

Mr. E. says in reply to my letter, "he is respon sible for the truth of his communications, an that I can have his name for the purpose of *correc*ing them if not true." It seems I was have his name only by guessing at it; and as I shall be o*bliged* to make frequent reference to his communi*cations*, and to avoid the insipid repetition of Mr E., I may advert to him as the gentlemen at the Plains. Your correspondent, then, at the Plains, in your paper of August 23d, in reply to the corres*pondent* Truth, in reference to instructions given by the town to their Representative in relation to the Branch from the Eastern Rail Road, says, "If there have been any such instructions by the town, I am not apprised of them, and I hope they will be published. but as to the instructions by the Committee, I say that Mr. Fowler paid no regard to them at all; and to show it I will state the transactions."

Now I undertake to say that the gentleman at the Plains must have been fully apprised of the instructions by the Town as they were written by himself.

It will be remembered by the citizens of Danvers and vicinity, that after the petition for an independent road from Danvers to Boston had been circulated and had obtained names, representing a very considerable proportion of the respectability and property of the citizens in this community; that the President of the E. R. Road Company started a petition with his own signature and associated with the officers and stockholders of that Corporation, praying the Legislature to grant them the privileges of constructing a Branch R. Road from Salem to Danvers.

Whether this movement on the part of this Corporation at this particular time, originated in the desire to accommodate the citizens of Danvers with Railroad facilities better than they then had; or whether it was for the purpose at the time being of throwing obstacles in the way of their obtaining a charter, agreeable to their own interests and wishes, is not with me at this time a matter of controversy. But the citizens of Danvers as well as those of other towns felt indignant at the unparelled attempt of the E. Raiload Company to force upon a portion of their citizens a branch Railroad which they had not asked for and neither did they want. And certainly there was no gentleman in this town who expressed himself in more decided terms against this overbearing art of the Eastern Railroad Company than did your correspondent, E. These two petitions were presented about the same time to the Legislature, and the orders of notice being served at the same time they were both acted upon at a legal meeting of the citizens of the town of Danvers called for that purpose.

It appears by the town record that the first motion made at this meeting was this. "That a committee of five be appointed to report such expressions of opinion on the several petitioners now before us as is proper to be adopted by the town.

The next vote was to hear the report of their Committee. It is in the form of a petition addressed to the "Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in General Court assembled."

This petition which is quite lengthy, goes on to show the great advantages which the citizens of Danvers would derive from an independent Railroad over those which could be expected by accepting a branch from the Eastern Railroad; and closes with these words:—"And we believe that there exists a necessity for the establishment of the Railroad prayed for by David Pingree and others; and we respectfully request that the prayer of said petition may be granted." By the record, this report of the Committee was unanimously accepted. The next vote passed was, "that this petition be presented to the Legislature in the name of the town as expressing their opinion on the petition of David Pingree and others." The next vote passed was this; "that the annexed expression of opinion in relation to D. A. Neal's petition be adopted by the town."—Which was as follows:

"In regard to the Petition of D. A. Neal as President of the Eastern Railroad Company, for leave to construct a Branch Railroad to Danvers:

"The inhabitants of Danvers in town meeting assembled, beg leave to say, that while the existing incumbrances to the convenient passing to Boston over the Eastern Rail Road, remain at the Ferry at the southerly termination of this road; it will not be possible for said Road to afford the inhabitants of this town such reasonable accommodations as they have a right to ask,—and therefore they cannot assent to the granting of said Petition."

The next vote adopted was: "that the Committee appointed by the town be intrusted to cause the petitions that have been adopted by this meeting, to be presented to the Legislature, and that they be authorized to make such verbal alterations as may be necessary to present the same in a correct form." I would here state that I find upon the files of the town, these petitions to be in the hand-writing of your correspondent E., with his real signiature attached to them.

FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to disnose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a per centage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us,to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition io the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurances to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerons patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

HARRISON'S REMEDY

FOR THE PILES.

THIS is an ointment prepared by the undersigned, and has been so thoroughly tested in so many different cases that I never hesitate to warrant relief to those who will give it a fair trial, observing the directions around each box which give a plain treatise on the disease and full instructions as to diet mode of cure, &c. One application at night never fails to relieve the greatest pain and anguish. I am ready to refer to numerous individuals who have proved this Remedy to be the safest, surest, speediest and cheapest

CURE FOR THE PILES.

My agent in Exeter writes thus: "the Pile Remedy which you left me is all sold, please send me soon a further supply, as a number of persons in this town think very highly of it. N. GILMAN"

MORE TESTIMONY.

Salem, Aug. 6. Mr. Harrison: The box of ointment which I had from you has worked like a charm—I have used it only one night, and I am cured. I had used Hays' Liniment as I stated to you, with no benefit but rather was worse, it causing more inflammation. Yrs, J. W.

BLEEDING PILES CURED.

Mr. Harrison—Having given your Peristaltic Lozenges and Pile Remedy a fair trial, I have the satisfaction to inform yon that they have operated wonderfully in my case. I had not been able for months to do any work at my trade, owing to exhaustion from bleeding, but I now feel myself cured. The severe pain which I had in my stomach is gone, and my strength is fast returning. I had used various remedies to no purpose, until I tried your medicine, I can also state that Capt. Benj. Ireson of this town has also experienced great benefit from your Remedy, I cheerfully recommend the medicine to all suffering with that distressing complaint—the Piles.

STATE LAWS.

AN ACT to incorporate the Merrimack Manufacturing Company.

Concluded.

Sect. 9. For the purpose of reimbursing said corporation in part for the cost and expense of keeping said locks and canals in repair, and in tending the same, and in clearing the passages necessary for the transit of boats and merchandise, and other articles through said canal, the following toll is hereby established and granted to said corporation on all goods, boats and merchandise, except rafts of wood and lumber, masts and floats of timber passing down said canal, and on all goods carried up through said canal, namely: on salt, lime, plaster, bar iron, pig iron, iron castings, anthracite coal, stone and hay, eight cents per ton of twenty-two hundred and forty pounds; on bituminous coal, twelve cents per chaldron of thirty-six bushels; on bricks, sixteen cents per thousand; on manure, fifty cents per load; on oak timber, thirty-five cents per ton of forty cubic feet; on pine plank and boards, thirty cents per thousand, board measure; on ash and other hard stuff, forty cents per thousand, board measure; on post and rails, fifteen cents per hundred; on treenails, thirty cents per thousand; on hop poles, twenty cents per thousand; on hard wood, twenty cents per cord; on bark twenty cents per cord; on white oak pipe staves, one dollar per thousand; on red oak pipe staves, sixty-seven cents per thousand; on white oak hogshead staves, sixty cents per thousand; on red oak hogshead staves, forty cents per thousand; on white oak barrel staves twenty cents per thousand; on hogshead hoops sixteen cents per thousand; on barrel hoops, twelve cents per thousand; on hogshead hoop poles, thirty cents per thousand; on barrel hoop poles, twenty cents per thousand; on all articles of merchandise not enumerated, ten cents per ton of twenty-two hundred and forty pounds: provided, that the rates of toll aforesaid shall be subject to the direction of the Legislature.

Sect. 10. The said dam shall not be built to flow the water in said river higher than the foot of Hunt's Falls, in the ordinary run and amount of water in the river, and a commission of three competent persons, to be appointed, one by the said corporation, and one by the proprietors of the locks and canals on Merrimack River, and a third by the two thus appointed, shall, upon the application of either party, fix and determine, by permanent monuments, the point in said river, which is the foot of Hunt's Falls; and shall also, upon the like application, fix and determine the height of the dam of this corporation, and of the flash boards to be used thereon, whose awardand determination shall be final and binding upon all parties forever. And if either party shall refuse, after request in writing by the other for the space of thirty days, to name such commissioner, or in case of a vacancy in such commission, for any cause, either party may apply to the Goveroor of this Commonwealth, who is herehy empowered to fill such vacancy. And the said point of the foot of Hunt's Falls, shall be fixed within sixty days after such application to the ecmmissioners, and the height of the permanent dam shall be fixed and determined within one year after such application.

Sect. 11. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Approved by the Governor, March 20, 1845.

NEW ENGLAND

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 264, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand. As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

Opening of Spring!

Magnificent, Chaste and Original Designs for Remodeling

"OAK HALL!"

FOR SPRING TRADE!

OPENING OF "OAK HALL" FOR THREE MONTHS!

Advice to Professional Men, Merchants Clerks with moderate Salaries, Farmers, Mechanics, Seamen, Firemen and others, VISIT OAK HALL!

ARRIVAL OF SPRING GOODS!

To Wholesale Dealers.

THE OPENING

This Morning, for Three Months!

I would again most respectfully inform the citizens of Boston, and strangers visiting the city, (after a delay of six weeks, during which time I have not been idle,) I have completed my arrangements on the most

MAGNIFICENT SCALE,

greatly surpassing my former arrangements. The Hall is splendidly decorated with almost

MAGIC ELEGANCE!

The architecture being Gothic, has given the artist an opportunity to display his taste to advantage. The paintings which adorn the walls are so perfectly chaste and appropriate, that every one will be fully compensated the trouble of visiting it. The design and effect of the interior, especially when

ILLUMINATED IN THE EVENING,

Is unequalled in any store this side of the Atlantic. Much praise is due to the artist, for his share in beautifying this Establishment. I flatter myself that the good taste of my fellow citizens and townsmen will fully appreciate all I have done, as my Establishment was the FIRST and ONLY ONE that adopted the

"EXTREME LOW PRICE SYSTEM,"

Before "OAK HALL" was in existence, it was not a very uncommon thing for a gentleman to pay from $45 to $50 for a suit of clothes. For one half of this sum or less, a perfect and entire suit can be obtained at this Establishment, cut and made with that ease and grace, that distinguish my garments from others. From this

EMPORIUM OF FASHION

first originated the Gothic style of architecture in Boston, and Oak Painting, &c. now so much in fashion. To those who have not visited this great

PLACE OF RESORT,

on account of the name of the street, I would most respectfully say, that where my establishment is located was once the Court end of Boston, and at this time is visited and patronized by the most influential and respectable individuals. Man, not unlike the fields, and Trees, once covered with a beautiful suit of Green is now breaking from its Coat of Ice and Snow and, having its dusty suit of nature soon to be warmed in-animation, and renew its beautiful suit of Green, So with Man—wrapped up in his Overcoat, he now on the opening of Spring, finds his under suit rusty and shabby, and is not suitable to wear. The next hing is to find a good place to fit out at a

and to be sure and have a GOOD FITTING SUIT, that will set upon the form with ease, grace and gentility.

FIVE GOOD REASONS

Why you can purchase at OAK HALL less than at any other Establishment in the United States:

FIRST—You do not pay me for YOUR suit, and the INDIVIDUAL'S that did not pay previous to you, as MY business is Cash on delivery.

SECOND—If any Garment made to order is not pleasing in every particular, it is no inconvenience to take it back and make another, as Ready Made Garments are directly in my line.

THIRD—I purchase my Goods in large lots, extremely cheap, and give my customers the benefit, by selling them at the smallest advances,

Fourth—I go by the motto.

LARGE SALES AND SMALL PROFITS
OR AS SOME SAY,
"NO PROFITS AT ALL."

That I'll leave with my customer to decide.

FIFTH—My facilities are such at this time doing a

LARGE BUSINESS,

that I can afford to sell at

VERY LOW PRICES!

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for people of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, that of pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit. The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with full directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamation of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to directionf. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

POETRY.

THE VISIONARY PORTRAIT.

BY MRS. NORTON.

As by his lonely hearth he sate,
The shadow of a welcome dream
Passed o'er his heart;—disconsolate
His home did seem;
Comfort in vain was spread around,
For something still was wanting found.

Therefore he thought of one who might
Forever in his presence stay;
Whose dream should be of him by night,
Whose smile should be for him by day;
And the sweet vision vague and far,
Rose on his fancy like a star.

"Let her be young, yet not a child,
Whose light and inexperienced mirth
Is all too winged and too wild
For sober earth—
Too rainbow-like such Mirth appears,
And fades away in misty tears.

"Let youth's fresh rose still bloom
Upon her smooth and downy cheek;
Yet let a shadow, not of gloom,
But soft and meek,
Tell that some sorrow she hath known,
Though not a sorrow of her own.

"Let her be full of quiet grace.
Not sparkling with a sudden glow,
Bright'ning her purely chiseled face
And placid brow;
Not radiant to the stranger's eye—
A creature easily passed by;

"But who, once seen, with untold power
Forever haunts the yearning heart,
Raised from the crowd that self-same hour
To dwell apart,
All sainted and enshrined to be
The idol of our memory!

"And oh! let Mary be her name—
It hath a sweet and gentle sound
At which no glories dear to fame
Come crowding round;
But which the dreaming heart beguiles
With holy thoughts and household smiles.

"With peaceful meetings, welcomes kind,
And love, the same in joy and tears,
And gushing intercourse of mind
Through faithful years;
Oh! dream of something half divine,
Be real—be mortal—and be mine!"

THE WIFE TO HER DYING HUSBAND.

I have loved thee in thy beauty,
Thy glory and thy power—
And shall I now desert thee,
In thy sorrow-stricken hour?
There is no hand save mine to wipe
The death-damps from thy brow;
Oh, false as thou hast been to me,
I will not leave thee now.

Thy friends and boon companions—
The gallant and the gay—
Thy lovely and beloved ones,
Look round thee—where are they?
No trusted friend is near thee now;
No gentle love appears,
To hang o'er thy death-swimming eyes.
And bathe them with her tears.

And I alone return at last,
My right in thee to claim;
I, with my sad and broken heart,
My blighted hopes and name;
I, with my love, which, strong as death—
Alike in good and ill—
Hath clung to thee, in scorn and shame,
Unchanged, unchanging still.

But I come not to reproach thee—
(Ah! would I came to save!)
I can but smooth the rugged path
That leads thee to thy grave;
But sit forever at thy feet,
Weeping in hopeless woe,
Ah, best beloved! would for thee
Mine own heart's blood might flow.

I have loved thee in thy glory,
Thy beauty, and thy power,
And I will not now desert thee
In thy sorrow-stricken hour;
There is no hand, save mine, to wipe
The death-damps from thy brow,
Oh, dearest to my heart and soul!
I will not leave thee now.

COMMUNICATION.

Concluded from our last.

The next vote passed was; "that nine persons be appointed to represent the town before the Committee of the Legislature, and to adopt all such measures to advance the interest of the town as they think proper." These petitions were put into the hands of my colleague, by the chairman of this Committee who requested him to present them to the Legislature, and move the reading of them before the House. This he accordingly did, and they were read by the Speaker. After these petitions were presented to the Legislature, I find them published in the Salem Gazette, under date, "Danvers, January 28th, 1845," by the request of the Railroad Committee of this town, under the following lead.

Mr. Editor,—Will you favor the petitioners for a New Railroad through Danvers to Boston, by inserting in your paper the following views on this subject, unanimously adopted by the inhabitants of Danvers, at a full meeting duly notified, to take into consideration the Petitions now pending before the Legislature. We ask this, that the people may understand that there are others who have rights to be protected, as well as stockholders in existing Corporations. We have no inclination to intermeddle with their rights—all we ask is the enjoyment of our own."

In view of all this array of evidence, it is impossible for me to see how the gentleman at the Plains can sustain himself against the charge of knowing that the Representatives from Danvers were instructed by the Town upon the Railroad question.

Did not this gentlemen when he wrote these petitions mean them for instructions? Was there an individual in the town, to his knowledge at that time who was not opposed to the Branch from the Eastern Railroad, and in favour of the Independent Road? Does he mean to say that these petitions embracing as they do in a most general sense the views of all the citizens of the town, meant to exclude from citizenship the Representatives of the Town?

Is he prepared to say, though this petition, and this remonstrance were put into the hands of the Representatives of the Town, that they were to pay no regard to views and wishes therein expressed? Was it not enough for honest men to be acquainted with the wants and wishes of the town legally and unanimously expressed, to do all in their power to carry into effect those wants and wishes unless by the same legal authority they could be annulled?

Was it the understanding of this Committee who requested that these petitions should be read before the house of Representatives, that every member of that body should be influenced thereby in there action upon this matter, excepting only the Representatives from their own Town?

Did not the counsel for the Petition of David Pingree and his associates, put into the case, while conducting it before the Railroad Committee of the Legislature, the action of the town of Danvers upon this petition as well as upon that of D. A. Neal and others; as evidence that the citizens of the Town of Danvers were unanimously opposed to a branch from the Eastern Railroad?

Did not the Town pass a direct vote instructing their committee in their action before the Committee of the Legislature "to adopt all such measures to advance the interest of the town as they might think proper?

Did not this Committee do all in their power to prevent Mr. Neal and his associates from obtaining a bill on their petition from the Railroad Committee? And did they not also use every possible exertion to obtain a bill on the Petition of D. Pingree and others?

I make now a direct appeal to reason and Common sense;

Would the citizens of Danvers at a legal meeting have instructed their Committee to represent the wants of the town before a committee of the Legislature, and have expected their Representatives to pursue a directly opposite course?

I here rest the examination of this point with the public to decide whether the Representatives of Danvers were instructed by the town to oppose the Eastern Railroad bill, before the Legislature of last winter.

The gentleman at the Plains also says. "But as to the instructions of the Committee I say Mr. Fowler paid no regard to them at all, &c".

I would here inform this gentleman that I did not then and neither do I now admit that this Committee were competent to give instructions to the Representatives of the Town. We were not the Representatives of this Committee exclusively. The town had in a most clear and decided manner expressed their wants and wishes upon the question of Railroads. The town had not vested this Committee with any authority whatever to reverse their unanimous action in this matter.

We had a legal voice, and a legal action in the house of Representatives only upon the suffrage of the town, and to the town and that alone were we responsible for our actions, and to them alone could we look for instructions.

Perhaps I should not do this Committee justice were I not to say that they so understood this matter. I find by reference to the Secretary's minutes of the meeting of this Committee, that every vote passed by this Committee was passed advising their Representatives to certain acts on this question.

This meeting of the Committee was held about a week before the close of the session, and it was expected hourly at this meeting that the Committee of the Legislature on Railways and Canals would make their reports on these petitions. These reports were not made to the Senate until late on Saturday and were then sent to the printers, and did not return until Monday evening, and were not acted upon in the Senate until Tuesday morning.

The entire business of the house was now about closed, there being nothing of importance to be acted upon except the bill establishing Railroad Commissioners, and the reports upon these two Railroad petitions.

The advice of the Towns Committee to their Representatives as appears by the record of their first vote was to obtain if possible a recommitment of the report on the petition of David Pingree and others, which was known to be adverse to the prayer of the petitioners.

This advice was received by the Representative of the town with pleasure, and it being agreeable to their views it would have been strictly followed had the reports been received in the house in season to have pressed such an action.

But the laetness of the hour at which they arrived, rendered such a course entirely impracticable.

The next advisory vote passed at this meeting of the Committee, was, that if a recommitment of this report could not be effected, that an endeavor be made to have it referred to the next General Court; which was accordingly done by the Senate.

Another vote was passed by this Committee; to have the bill reported in favor of D. A. Neal and his associates, so amended as to make it obligatory on the Eastern Railroad Company to extend their Branch Railroad to North, as well as South, Danvers; and another amendment, that this Branch should be built only by the consent of the town. Another motion was made, to have the second section of the bill reported in favor of the Eastern Railroad stricken out, which was in effect to destroy the whole bill relating to the Danvers Branch; and upon this question it was a tie vote.

The advice of the Committee in their two last votes, the Representatives of the town did not feel themselves at liberty to follow—and for two reasons: first, because there was such an absolute contradiction in the requests of this Committee.—Their first wish was, that a recommitment of the report on their own petition might be effected; and if that could not be done, then to leave it in the best possible position, to be again renewed, by referring it to the next Legislature. And second, if the Representatives from Danvers had proposed an amendment to the Eastern Railroad bill, they would have acknowledged an interest in the passage of it, which would not only have conflicted with the action of the town, which had been read before the Legislature upon the merits of this question, but it would have shown a lamentable want of sagacity in the Representatives of the town, to have permitted the report of their own petition to be referred to the next General Court, for further action; and then permitted a bill to have passed the house, which would have forever forbidden any one from disturbing its quietus.

I have in this communication, which is more lengthy than I intended it should be when I commenced it, given a brief sketch of the most important action which took place upon the Railroad question (concerning the town) last winter. I have made no allusions, and drawn no inferences which cannot be, or have not been substantiated by irresistible evidence.

The gentleman at the Plains, made some very indiscreet allusions to appliances in a previous communication, which, he insinuated, were made use of to influence me against my own convictions of right, as well as against the interests of the town upon this Railroad question. It certainly gives me more pain than pleasure to use the advantage which I possess to retort upon this gentleman on this point, with a force which I am sure will not only forbid a comparison, but put to shame a reply. Could he possibly have forgotten when he used that significant term, appliances, that on the last night previous to the action in the House, on the Eastern Railroad bill, that the company at Wilde's Hotel in Boston left him with my colleague and myself, the only occupants of his sitting-room, and that too, long after the passing watch had rung his cry of midnight? That all our conversation was upon this much agitated subject of Railroads, must have been already surmized by the reader; and correctly too.

As the last communication of my disputant was quite brief and spirited, I think it is an indication that he has hardly freed himself from that collection of ill humor which must have been gathering for several months. I shall therefore close this, with the expectation of being compelled to make another application of truth, which has never failed in the end to work an effectual cure.

THE FORGED PATENT

BY JOHN RUSSELL

Remember you no case like this? Or if
Your memory none records, is such a one
So much at odds with probability
Your fancy cannot imagine it?

The changes which the late twenty years have wrought in Illinois, would be incredible to any one who has not witnessed them. At that time the settlements were few and the spirit of enterprise which now pervades every corner of the State, had not been awakened. The bluffs of the beautiful Illinois river had never sent back the echo of the steam engine. Without a market for their produce, the farmers confined their labors to the wants of their own families. Corn was nearly the only crop raised, and from the time it was "laid by," near the end of June, till," in November, was a holiday, and the intervening period was passed in idleness, except the Saturdays. On that day, duly as it arrived, the settlers far and near, collected at the distillery, and amused themselves with shooting at a mark, "trading nags," and too often when the cup had passed freely round, in fighting.

This is by no means the picture of all the settlements of that early period, but that it is graphically true of many, none of the old settlers will deny. But to my narrative.

One Saturday afternoon in the year 1810, a young man was seen approaching with slow and weary steps, the house, or rather the distillery of Squire Crosby, of Bent's Prairie, an obscure settlement on the Military Tract. As usual on that day, a large collection of people were amusing themselves at Crosby's who owned the distillery in that region—was a magistrate, and regarded by the settlers as rich, and consequently as a great man.

The youth who now came up to the group was apparently about twenty-one years of age, of slender form, and delicate complexion, with the air of one accustomed to good society, and it was evident at a glance that he was not inured to the hardships of a frontier life, or labor of any kind. But his dress bore a strange contrast with his appearance and manners. He wore a hunting coat of coarsest linsey woolsey, a common straw hat, and a pair of deerskin moccasins. A large pack completed his equipment.

Every one gazed with curiosity upon the new comer. In their eagerness to learn who he was, whence he came, and what his business, the horse swap was left unfinished—the rifle was laid aside, and even the busy tin cup had a temporary respite.

The young man approached Squire Crosby, whom even a stranger could distinguish as the principal personage among them, and anxiously inquired for a house where he could be accommodated, saying he was extremely ill and felt all the symptoms of an approaching fever.

Crosby eyed him keenly and suspiciously for a moment without uttering a word. Knaves and swindlers had been recently abroad, and the language of the youth betrayed that he was a "Yankee," a name at that time associated in the minds of the "ignorant" with every thing that is base.—Mistaking the silence and hesitation of Crosby for a fear of his inability to pay, the stranger smiled and said, "I am not without money," and putting his hand to his pocket to give ocular proof of the assertion, he was horror-struck to find that his pocket book, was gone, It contained every cent of his money, besides papers of great value to him.

Without a farthing—without even a single letter or paper to attest that his character was honorable—in a strange land, and sickness rapidly coming upon him—these feelings nearly drove him to despair. The Squire, who prided himself on his sagacity in detecting villains, now found the use of his tongue. With a loud and sneering laugh, he said:—"Stranger, you are barking up the wrong tree if you think for to 'cotch' me with 'that arr' Yonkee trick of your'n." He proceeded in that inhuman strain, seconded by nearly every one present, for the "Squar" was powerful, and few dared to displease him. The youth felt keenly his desolate situation, and casting his eye around over the group, in a tone of deep anxiety inquired, "is there none who will receive me?"—"Yes, I will," cried a man among the crowd; "yes, poor sick stranger, I will shelter you." Then, in a lower tone he added. "I know not whether you are deserving, but I know that you are a fellow being, and in sickness, and in want, and for the sake of Him who died for the guilty, if not for your own sake, will I be kind to you, poor young stranger."

The man who stepped forth and proffered a home to the youth in the hour of suffering was Simon Davis, an elderly man who resided near Crosby, and to whom the latter was a deadly enemy.—Uncle Simon, as he was called, never retaliated, and bore the many persecutions of his vindictive neighbor, without complaint. His family consisted of himself and daughter, his only child, an affectionate girl of seventeen.

The youth heard the offer of Mr Davis, but heard no more, for overcome by his feelings and extreme illness, he fell insensible to the earth. He was conveyed to the house of his benefactor, and a physician called. Long was the struggle between life and death. Though unconscious, he called upon his mother and sister, almost incessantly, to aid him. When the youth was laid upon her bed, and she heard him calling for his sister, Lucy Davis wept and said to him, "Poor sick young man, your sister is far distant and cannot hear you, but I will be to you a sister." Well did this dark-eyed maiden keep her promise.—Day and night did she watch over him, except when she yielded her post at his side to her father.

At length the crisis of his disorder arrived—the day that was to decide the question of life or death. Lucy bent over him with intense anxiety, watching every expression of his features, hardly daring to breathe, so fearful was she of waking him from the only sound sleep he had enjoyed for nine long days and nights. At length he awoke and gazed up in the face of Lucy Davis, and faintly enquired, "Where am I?" There was intelligence in that look. Youth and a good constitution had obtained the mastery. Lucy felt that he was spared, and bursting into a flood of irrepressible, grateful tears, rushed out of the room.

It was two weeks more before he could sit up, even for a short time. He had already acquainted them with his name and residence, but they had no curiosity to learn any thing further, and forbid his giving his story till he became stronger. His name was Charles Wilson, and his paternal home Boston.

A few days afterwards, when Mr Davis was absent from home, and Lucy engaged about her household affairs, Wilson saw at the head of his bed, his pack, and recollecting something that he wanted, opened it. The first thing he saw was the identical pocket-book whose loss had excited so many bitter regrets. He recollected having placed it there in the morning before he reached Brent's Prairie, but in the confusion of the moment that circumstance was forgotten. He examined and found every thing as he left it.

This discovery nearly restored him to health, but he resolved at present to confine the secret to his own bosom. It was gratifying in him to witness the entire confidence they reposed in the honor and integrity of a stranger, and the pleasure with which they bestowed favors upon one whom they supposed could make no return but thanks.

Night came, and Mr. Davis did not return.—Lucy passed a sleepless night. In the morning she looked hour after hour for his coming, and when sunset approached, and he was still absent, terrified at his long and unusual stay, she was setting out to procure a neighbor to go in search of him, when he hove in sight. She ran to meet him, and was bestowing upon him a thousand endearing expressions of affection, when his haggard woe-begone countenance startled her.

He uttered not a word, and went into his house and seated himself in silence. It was in vain that Lucy attempted to cheer him. After a long pause, during which a powerful struggle was going on in his feelings, he arose, and took his daughter by the hand, and led her into the room where Wilson was seated. "You shall know all," said he; "I am ruined—I am a beggar. In a few days I must quit this house—this farm which I have so highly improved and thought my own."—He proceeded to state, that a few days before, Crosby in a moment of ungoverable malice taunted him with being a beggar, and told him he was now in his power, and he would crush him under his feet. When Mr. Davis smiled at what he regarded as only an impotent threat, Crosby told him that the patent of his farm was a forged one, and he, C., knew the real owner of the land had ten to purchase it—and expected a deed in a days. Davis immediately went home for his tent, and during his long absence had visited land office. C. was right. The patent, be ill dispute, was a forged one, and the clai Davis to the farm not worth a farthing.

It would be well to observe, that counterfe soldier's patents was a regular busines some of the eastern cities, and hundreds been duped.

"It is not for myself," said the old man, "grieve at this misfortune. I am advanced in and it matters not how and where I pass my maining days. I have a home beyond the where your mother has gone before me, wh would long since have joined her had I not to protect my child, my own, my affectionate cy. The weeping girl flung her arms aroun neck of her father, and poured her tears upo bosom. "We can be happy still," said she, I am young and can easily support us both."

A new scene followed, in which another in ual was a principal actor. I shall leave the er to form his own opinion of it, and barel mark, that at the close, the old man took the of Lucy and the young Wilson, and joining said "My children, I cheerfully consent to union. Tho' poor, with good conscience you be happy. I know, Charles, that you will be to my daughter, for a few nights ago, when thought no human ear could hear you, I heard fervently implore the blessings of heaven upo grey hairs, and that God would reward my for all her kindness to you." Taking down family Bible, the venerable old man added, "I season of affliction but we are not forsaken; look up to Him who has promised to sustain He opened the book and read, "Although th tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be the vines; the labors of the olive shall fail and field shall yield no meat; the flocks shall be cu from the fold, and there shall be no herd in stall, yet will I rejoice in the Lord; I will joy the God of my salvation."

Charles and Lucy knelt beside the venera old man, and while he prayed they wept tears grateful emotion.

It was a sleepless but not an unhappy nigh the three inhabitants of the neat and cheerful d ling they were about to leave, and go they k not where. It was then that young Wi learnt the real value of money. By means he could give a shelter to those who had kindl ceived when every other door was closed u him.

All night he thought of the forged paten There were a few words dropped by Mr D which he could not dismiss from his mind— C. had written to the real owner of the land obtained a promise of a deed.

It is now time for the reader to become fully acquainted with the history of the yo stranger.

His father, Charles Wilson, Sr., was a chant of Boston, who had acquired a large fort At the close of the last war, when the soldier ceived their bounty of one hundred and sixt cres of land, many of them offered their paten Mr Wilson for sale. Finding that they were solved to sell them, he concluded to save them f sacrifice of their hard earnings, and purchase fair price all that were offered. In three years small portion of military tract came into his session.

On the day that Charles became of age, he g him a deed of the principal part of his land in nois, and insisted that he should go out and se and if he liked the country, settle there. Wish him to become identified with the people, he commended his son on his arrival in the State lay aside his broadcloth, and dress like a ba woodsman.

In compliance with this suggestion, the yo man had assumed a rude and rustic dress so in propriate to his appearance and manners, as to cite the suspicion that he had some motives concealing his real character.

On the morning of his son's departure, Mr. W son received a letter from a man in Illinois had frequently written. He wished to purch a certain quarter section at government pr which Mr. Wilson promised he should have those terms, provided he forwarded a certific from the Circuit Court, that the land was wo no more. The letter just received enclosed certificate in question. Mr. Wilson had giv this tract to Charles, and putting the letter certificate into his hand, enjoined upon him deed it to the writer agreeable to promise, on arrival in Illinois.

The remarks of Mr. Davis forcibly remin young Wilson of this incident, and on the n morning after he became acquainted with the sign of Crosby, with a trembling hand examin the letter and certificate. It was written by Cr by, and the land he wished to purchase the iden cal farm of Davis.

Astonished that his friend, the Judge, shou certify that the land was worth no more, Mr. vis asked to see the certificate; and after a m ment's examination, unhesitatingly pronoun the signature a FORGERY.

An explanation from the young man now came necessary, and calling Lucy into the roo told them his story, and laid before them a p of patents and bank notes, one after another, the pile reached thousands. It was a day thankful happiness to old Simon Davis and daughter, and not less to young Wilson.

Not long after this scene, Crosby entered. air was that of a man who has an enemy in power and intends to trample upon him. scarcely noticed Wilson except with a look of co tempt. After pouring out his maledictions up the family, he advised them to leave immediate The old man inquired if he would give him no ing for the improvements he had made? The a swer was, "not a cent." "You certainly wo not" said Wilson, "drive out this old man and daughter penniless into the world!"

"What is that to you?" replied Crosby, with a look of malice and contempt. "I will answer you that question," said Wilson, and acquainted him with what the render already has learnt. Crosby at first was stupified with astonishment, but when he saw that all his schemes of villany were defeated, and proof of his having committed forgery could be established, his assurance forsook him, and he threw himself upon his knees and begged, first of the old man, then of Lucy and Wilson, to spare him.

Much as they pitied him, it was impossible for them not to despise the meanness of his supplications.

Wilson told him that he deserved no mercy; that a moment since he would have driven the family of Davis from their home, without even the means of a temporary support. He would be merciful,—guilty as he was. He would pay Crosby a fair price for his property, and forbear prosecuting him, on condition of his instantly quitting the country. Crosby accepted the offer. The writings were made out that day, and before morning, he and his family were on their way to Texas.

Why should I spin out the narrative? Lucy and Charles were married, and though a splendid mansion soon rose on the farm of Mr. Davis, both loved far better the little room where she had so long and so patiently watched over the sick bed of the homeless stranger. Mr. Wilson was rich, but never forgot those who were in want.

Cheered by the kind and affectionate attention of his children, old Simon Davis almost seemed to have renewed his existence. He lived many years, long enough to tell the bright-eyed son of Charles and Lucy, the story of the FORGED DEED: And when he told the listening boy how his father, when poor and friendless, was taken home and kindly treated, and in turn became their benefactor, he impressed upon the mind of his grandchild, that "even a cup of cold water given from a good motive shall not lose its reward."

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 13, 1845.

TO OUR PATRONS.

As this number completes the first six months o the establishment of our paper, we have thought it not inappropriate to say a few words to those friends who have kindly aided us in our undertaking. We are particularly obliged to those few friends by whose encouragement and assistance our press was introduced into this flourishing town, and also to those contributors who have, by there able communications given character and respectability to our journal. Although we may be debarred by our position, from saying anything commendatory of the editorial portion of the paper, we may be permitted to express our conviction that what has appeared in our columns from correspondents will compare favorably with many older journals whose reputation has been long established.

The introduction of a new paper into a village is always accompanied by many difficulties, and among these, the impossibility of suiting the tastes of all, is one of the most prominent. We have endeavored to do this so far as we were able by furnishing as great variety as possible consistent with our limited space.

Our experiment thus far if it cannot be said to be a highly successful one, has convinced us that a weekly newspaper can be well sustained in Danvers, if its citizens will only afford it that degree of support, which considering the population and business of the place, ought reasonably to be expected. This support should be rendered first by subscription to the paper, by personal influence to induce others to subscribe, and finally, by advertising patronage. To give the Courier efficient support, by which we shall be enabled to increase its capacity and usefulness, we need an accesion to our subscription list of one hundred names. We are of the opinion that this number might be found who would readily become subscribers had we the means of making personal application or otherwise offer the opportunity of obtaining their names. Will it be too much for us to ask of those who are already our patrons, to aid us by a good word in extending the circulation of the paper?

We fear that our citizens are not yet fully aware of the advantage to themselves by making their location and their business known by advertising. We may here suggest to those gentlemen whose duties to the public lead them to transact business with the Probate Court and County Commissioners, whether it would not be right and appropriate to have the public notices relating to our town, given to a paper having most of its circulation among its citizens.

We intended to have made some remarks on the advantages of a well conducted newspaper to a town, by its making known from time to time its actual situation, its progress and its prospects by which its respectability abroad is increased and fact of its existence at least, made known to the world, but we have extended our remarks beyond our original intention and close by thanking our subscribers for their past favors and respectfully "soliciting a continuance."

☞The Salem Gazette in its remarks on our article entitled "Danvers Thirty Years Ago," intimates that the extent of our territory, and the diversity of interests in the two sections of the town will cause its division into two separate towns.—We hope the time for any such division is far distant, and its evils may be averted by a proper regard on the part of the citizens of one section to the rights of the other; but if such a rupture should take place, we imagine that instead of two towns, the Southern portion would choose to be annexed to Salem, or rather have Salem annexed to us. On every account it seems better to endure slight evils and remain a corporation respectable in size compared with other places, rather than by our divisions be cut up into Middletons and Lynnfields.

Edward Everett. We had hoped that this gentleman would be allowed to retain his post, unmolested by the proscription of a new administration, and that our country would still be honored by the continuance in his high office of one so eminently qualified by nature and experience to adorn it. But as was expected, Mr. Polk has decreed otherwise, by his appointment of Hon. Louis Mc Lane to succeed in the embassadorship. We are not so much disposed to find fault with this appointment (for a much worse might have been made,) as to regret that any occasion for it should have occurred without adequate reason. Mc Lane may be a good appointment—Everett, we are sure, is a bad rejection. The former may acquire distinction as ambassador—the latter has proved himself in the highest degree worthy of it. Though his recall be a cause for regret, it is not, perhaps, one for wonder: Mr. Everett is a whig, and an advantageous specimen of the party; and though it is natural that Mr. Polk should prefer that our representative in that country be taken from his own party, and such a preference is excusable in an interested politician,—we think it in reality but a slight objection to be made to one so capaciously an American. Mr. Polk, we presume, finds but little fault with the official conduct of the late ambassador: for anything which we have heard to the contrary, his performance of the duties devolving upon him has been as near faultless as could well be; and besides his support of the honor of our government as a duty, he has in other ways, by his brilliant accomplishments, reflected credit upon the land of his birth. In the learned Societies in which his presence has been so flatteringly welcomed, and where he has almost without an exception been called upon the floor—he has by his sound and extensive information, his ready eloquence, and his appreciation of whatever is ennobling to national character in Science, Literature, and Art, been received with acclamation and listened to with delight. He has given to England a more correct and elevated view of the onward progress of mind in our country; and the liberal and conciliatory spirit which he has manifested, has been well calculated to strengthen the union between the two countries.

It is however to us, a source of high gratification to know that the event which deprives our country of the benefit of his services abroad, will restore him to a wide sphere of usefulness at home: he has left behind him a large circle of warm personal friends and public admirers, and he will receive on his return a hearty welcome at their hands.—Such a man would be an honor to any country, and he cannot remain unappreciated in his own.

Cassius M. Clay. From recent advices we learn that this gentleman who has been considered in a very critical situation, is slowly recovering his health, and we hope that his life may long be spared to enable him to pursue the glorious career which he has entered upon with such an indomitable zeal as cannot long be continued without meeting with deserved and distinguished success. An ardent lover of liberty, possessed of a powerful and discriminating mind enriched by earnest study of those subjects best suited to qualify for the task he has chosen—the advancement of the blessings of freedom in our country—his establishment of the True American Press in his beloved Kentucky, was witnessed with the liveliest emotions of gratitude and sympathy by the friends of freedom throughout the land. At the North in particular, the exalted character of its originator, his ripe judgment, his extensive knowledge of his subject, and his inflexible steadiness of purpose, were universally regarded as sufficient guarrantees of the reasonableness of his undertaking, and of our indulgence of rational hopes in its success.—Nor have we been disappointed in our anticipations of the course of Mr. Clay. We have seen those principles which we have been accustomed to regard as at the foundation of our prosperity, boldly avowed and maintained in a community in which their success would ensure the destruction of that system in whose favor the prejudices of the rich and powerful are so warmly engaged. Of the fact and the reason of the discontinuance of the True American, our readers are well aware—but it is evident that in the few short months in which it has been published, it has been productive of much good to the cause which it has been the aim of its editor to support, and which he has with such noble energy persevered in. The mob-leaders, though it should prove that they have successfully prevented the further publication of the True American, at Lexington, will find it in vain to attempt the concealment of the fact that such a press has had an existence in their slave-holding State; that the True American has been extensively read in Kentucky admits not of a doubt, and that its plain, blunt truth has carried undesired conviction to many minds of the superiority of liberty to slavery as a means of promoting the prosperity of the State, admits of as little; and they may well blush when the question is put to them which admits but of this degrading answer—that what they could not successfully cope with in manly argument, they could and did crush by brute force. The contemptible excuses alleged in defence of conduct totally indefensible as in defiance of, and a triumph of insubordination over, Law, are too easily seen through. to satisfy the people that they were actuated by the motives they profess; they have virtually admitted by their acts that they know that their 'peculiar institution' has its foundation in gross error, and that its continuance in its wonted prosperity is inconsistent with the ever irresistible light of truth. In the performance of his duties as editor of the American, Mr. Clay had accummulated such a mass of evidence in favor of the justice of the cause in which he was enlisted, and of the great and elevating influences which would accrue to Kentucky from success, that the upholders of slavery might well have trembled; the clearness and force with which he avowed his to them unpalatable truths, and the soundness of the arguments in which he intrenched himself, forbade any availing opponents in intellectual strife, and though painful to witness in silence such heavy blows dealt against slavery, it was considered the least of two evils, and no attempt worthy of notice was made to refute the irrefutable.

Speculation is rife as to the course which the editor of the True American will pursue in the event of his recovery. Nothing is known of his determination upon this point, but we doubt not that his will be as it ever has been, an honorable one. "C. M. Clay knows his rights," and he will show, we trust, that he does not lack his accustomed courage "to defend them."

DANVERS THIRTY YEARS HENCE.

A few weeks since we offered some reflections, suggested by reminiscences of what our village was thirty years ago. We will now attempt to anticipate what it may become if a common degree of prosperity should attend its enterprise, in the same period of time. Judging from the past we may safely calculate that at that time we shall have a population exceeding 1200 inhabitants for the maintenance of this population it is probable that new branches of business will be established and it is altogether likely that some other prominent manufacture may take the place of the leather buisiness and the amount of the latter be much diminished. It is also obvious, that the number of dwellings, stores, churches and schools must increase in proportion to the increase of population and that these must occupy a greater extent of territory than the present settled parts of the town. It is possible that the people will by that time adopt a city form of government on account of the inconvenience arising from a large assembly attempting to transact business under a moderator in town meeting

Perhaps we cannot better carry out our design than by a few extracts from the Danvers Courier, of the year 1875.

GREAT FIRE IN LIBERTY STREET!

We stop our press to give the particulars, so far as we can ascertain them, of a destructive fire which broke out last night about ten o'clock, in Mr. Sibleys cabinet store No. 76 Liberty, St.—The wind was very high and the water at considerable distance and notwithstanding the most entiring exertion of the firemen twenty-two buildings were destroyed. Several of them were dwelling houses newly erected. The fire was checked at the fire proof brick store of Hart and Haynes, No. 92. Had it not been stopped here the City Hall and Episcopal Church must have been destroyed. We must defer our account of the individual losses until our next, also our speculations as to the cause of the fire. We regret to have to state that one of the firemen of Engine No. 12 was seriously injured by a fall caused by the breaking of a ladder.

This is said to have been the greatest fire in Danvers, since those in 1842 and 1845—the first was in the 2d Ward, when the South church was burnt and the latter in the 5th Ward on Maple St. A full account of these distructive fires may be found on the records of the Fire Department which we intend to publish, with other particulars, to be furnished us by the venerable gentleman who made the record.

☞We learn that the 3d Baptist Society are about to erect their church on Prescott Street near the corner of Crowninshield St. It is to be built of stone, from a ledge on Buxton's hill, near the site of the church.

Sale of Real Estate. Two vacant lots on Washington St. were yesterday sold under hammer for $15 per front foot. They were each 80 feet front amounting to $1200. We see by an old file of the Courier that these lots with others were sold at auction by the same Auctioneer, Mr. Squires Shove, 30 years ago, for about $200 per lot, or $250 per foot. Yet!

Village Bank. The stockholders of this institution have voted to apply to the Legislature for liberty to increase their capital to $100,000 this increase being required on account of the additional business of that part of the City since the establishment of the two Steam Woolen Factories.

Centenial Celebration of Independence! The celebration of the 200th Aniversary of Independence in this city yesterday, was an occasion of more than ordinary interest. Danvers never witnessed greater numbers or more joyous groups than yesterday thronged its streets. The Procession was formed at 9 o'clock at Crowninshield Square, where large numbers had assembled, so that this extensive public ground seemed almost covered with people. The Procession was escorted by the Danvers Lt. Infantry and Village Riflemen accompanied by the Danvers Brass Band and both companies made quite a military appearance. After marching through the principal streets the Procession proceeded to the new Episcopal Church, where an Oration was delivered by F. R. Putnam Esq., which was listened to with undivided attention by a large auditory. In the course of his remarks the orator alluded to the erection of the monument, the corner stone of which he said was laid 40 years ago by Gen. Foster, then 86 years of age, the commander and only survivor of the company which went to Lexington from this place the 19th of April, 100 years ago. His portrait now adorns the City Hall, and the speaker stated that he lived to be more than 100 years of age. Allusion was also made to the active part taken by citizens of Danvers in the Revolutionary War as seen by the old Town Records. The Oration was rich in historic facts and reminiscences and did great credit to the youthful orator, who is under 25 years of age and a direct descendant from Gen. Israel Putnam of revolutionary memory.

The day was fine and the Procession brilliant, the banners and regalia of the various Societies,—the Mechanic and Village Institutes, the Rechabites, Sons of Temperance, Firemen, Masonic and other Bodies adding much to the interest and splendor of the occasion.

Rail Road Accident. The train of cars from Amesbury had a slight collision with a dirt train which had been incautiously left on the track near Georgetown. We noticed that the engine was partially injured as the passengers train passed through this city for Boston yesterday.

Legislative. The Bill for the purchase, on the part of the Commonwealth, of the several Rail roads in the State, has passed the Senate and will be considered in the other branch to day. Our three representatives are said to be in favor of the bill and we cannot conceive why any one not interested as a stockholder can object to an arrangement so obviously to the advantage of the Commonwealth. The average increase of all the roads exceeds 8 per ct. and the State can obtain the money on her Scrip at 2 per cent. interest.

Curiosity.—At the museum of Wax Figures now exhibiting at Putnan Hall, there is one object which attracts the principal attention of visitors. It is a female figure dressed in the costume worn by that sex about 1845. The strange and uncouth appearance of this figure excites the utmost attention, as it is asserted that this identical dress with all its deformities was actually worn by a lady at the period referred to, at which time it was in the height of the fashion! It is amusing to witness the bursts of merriment excited by a view of this figure especially by the younger part of the visiters, who can hardly be made to believe that such appendages were ever worn by their mothers and grandmothers. There are however many persons not much past the middle age of life who remember the fashion and who say this is not an extravagant representation of it, but that at that day it was so common as not to excite much attention. Such is the power of fashion!

There is also in this exhibition a representation of a male figure of the same period, whose head and face is envoloped in such a mass of hair that scarce any part is visible, except the eyes, nose and cheek bones. We think this must be a caricature as we cannot believe that the ladies would be blind to such a deformity in the gentlemen, however they might be to one of their own; and without their assent no fashion away the men can prevail.

We may select farther extracts from these interesting files, for publication in a future paper, if these excite sufficient interest with our readers.

☞Our neighborhood during a few days, has been several times thrown into a state of momentary excitement by the cry of "Loose horse," occasioned by the dashing at full speed down Main street of some horse and vehicle, "with a perfect looseness," and, although no serious damage has been done, there have been some hair-breadth escapes. We would beg leave to suggest to every person entrusted with the care of a team, the necessity of securing it when about leaving it alone, and not suffer the lives of their fellow citizens to be jeopardized by their carelessness.

ORDINATION.

Mr Richard Tolman, of Dorchester, (late of Andover Theological Seminary,) will be ordained as Pastor of the Third Congregational Church in this town, (at the Plains) on Wednesday next. The Sermon is to be preached by Rev. E. N. Kirk of Boston. The Rev. Dr. Codman, of Dorchester, Rev. Mr. Withington, of Newbury, Rev. Mr. Field of this town, and others are expected to take part in the exercises. The services will commence at half past 1 o'clock P. M.

Military—Fall Reviews. The 2d Reg. Artillery, 4th Brigade, 2d Div. M. V. M., under command of Col. Bowler, assembled at Newburyport, yesterday, for inspection and review.

The Third Brigade, 2d Div., under Gen. Dana, will be inspected and reviewed at Lowell, on Wednesday next, 17th inst. This Brigade comprisesall the companies in Middlesex County, making three regiments and twenty-one companies.

The Boston Regiments will appear on Boston Common, on Tuesday, 23d inst.

The sixth regiment of Light Infantry, 4th Brigade, 2d Division, will assemble in Salem on Thursday, Oct. 2d.

Handsome Donation. William Lawrence, of Boston, has presented to the First Parish Church in Groton, the place of his nativity, an Organ, as a testimony of his regard for those who continue to worship where he first received the instructions of public preaching. The Committee of the Parish, in acknowledging this handsome donation, allude to another donation from the same source, of more than $10,000 within a year, to the Groton Academy.

Vermont. Notwithstanding the falling off in the vote, the Whigs of Vermont have taken care, nevertheless, to place every department of their State government in the hands of the Whigs.—The Legislature will be Whig by a large majority, and they will elect a Whig Governor. The Whigs have gained three Senators. Caledonia Country, which the Locos have had every year since 1840, has now chosen two Whig Senators. Grand Isle has, also, chosen a Whig in place of a Loco. The Green Mountain State is not a fit abiding place for Loco Focoism.

"The New Yorker" is the name of a fair sized and neatly printed weekly newspaper, recently issued by Greely & McElrath, of New York. This is designed to be a journal of Literature and General Intelligence, similar to the old "New Yorker," a deservedly popular journal conducted by H. Greeley, Esq. It will be afforded for one dollar a year, and no political matter, of a partisan character will be admitted to its columns.

Trial of Wyman. On Wednesday last, Wyman, Cashier of the Phenix Bank, Charlestown, was discharged on a technical ground, that the Cashier and not the President, is reponsible for the custody of bank assets and moneys. The Post says, Mr. Webster made no plea, the matter was submitted without argument, and "not guilty" recorded as a Jury verdict. Mr. Wyman was then held to bail in $17,000, to answer on other indictments for less heinous offences.

DEATH OF JUDGE STORY.

We have the painful duty to announce the death of Joseph Story, L. L. D., one of the Justices of the U. S. Supreme Court, and Dane Professor of Law in Harvard University. He expired at his residence, in Cambridge, on Wednesday evening, at a quarter before nine o'clock aged 66. His pulse ceased to beat, and his hands were cold, before eight P. M. His disease was stoppage of the intestines, or strangulation. We intend in a future number to give a short sketch of the life of this distinguished man.

FOR THE COURIER

Mr. Editor—The issue between E. and myself has been upon the vested rights doctrine, and upon the question whether the proposed new road will be profitable to the stockholders, and whether the Legislature should interest itself in the probable profit. The vested right question has been the most difficult one, and I am happy to see from E's last communication that we are likely to agree upon that.

E. in his communication of July 26th, pronounced the vested right doctrine an odious one, and then went on to explain what it was, which he did partially, by saying that if the public should desire ever so much benefit from the new Road, then they should have it even if it injured a road already constructed. What this "ever so much" was, he did not specify, yet he thought he had explained fully the vested right notion. In the same article however he stated that Railroads should receive a "reasonable protection" from the public. I asked him then what that protection should be. He replied by saying that Railroads should be protected not only the same with "other similar corporations," but in "common with the rights of the whole community." I then asked him to specify what particular protection he meant by "in common with the rights of the whole community," and finding that he was compelled to leave his covert, he says: I think cotton factories, stage companies and turnpike corporations should be considered in the application for more charters, and adds, "the same principle will apply to them as to Railroad corporations." Well, I think now he has got into a position where he can be understood. He now says he will put Railroads upon the same ground with other corporations in regard to vested rights. It is all I have ever asked him to do. But he makes this distinction, that although the same principle applies to all corporations, in common with Railroads, yet that they should be protected from the competition of subsequent ones. Now compare his principles with existing facts, and in what is E's position different from mine? The facts are, that the State never has applied these principles to any other corporations than Railroad corporations. It never has consulted one stage company in incorporating a second. It never has regarded one factory in the establishment of others, and it never has considered turnpike corporations in chartering Railroads; and as E. distinctly allows that the same principle applies to all, and as the state is expected to take an impartial and consistent course, it must either not consider existing Roads in chartering subsequent ones, or it must regard factories, stage companies and turnpike corporations in incorporating others and in chartering Railroads. In either alternative, our views are precisely similar. When the State does take such a father'ly care of stage coaches, factories, and turnpikes, if that time ever comes, I shall not object to Railroads receiving the same. So on the vested right question I do not see but we have come to a conclusion.

Then throwing entirely out of the question, as we are bound to, the effect of a new road upon the existing one, the question raised by E. upon the probable profit of such new road. Upon this I have replied at length before, and I trust satisfactorily to all candid minds. But I contend that the Legislature has no right to be influenced at all by that question. They should no more deny charters through fear that the road when constructed, will be poor property, than they should restrict the number of tanners, of curriers, of shoe makers, or of laborers of any other occupation, simply because they in their wisdom, apprehend that the market will be overstocked with their manufactured articles. It would in any other case but that of Railroads be looked upon as an unwarrantable interference by the Legislature, and I can see no reason why the same feeling should not exist in regard to Railroads.

I cannot see that E. has any substantial ground to stand upon, taking the position he has upon the vested right question, and unless he brings up new issues, I cannot see that any good can accrue from further comment upon those already started.

Bowdoin College. At the recent Commencement, the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Hon. Joseph R. Ingersoll of Philadelphia; that of D. D. was confered on Rev. George Putnam of Roxbury, and Rev. Benjamin Tappan of Augusta. The honorary degree of A. M. was conferred on Hon John Fairfield, John A. Poor, and John Coombs, Esqrs.

Judicial Nuisances. The Newburypert Herald states that Mr Webster appeared in a case which was argued before the Supreme Court in Bristo county, last week. The case involved a claim o about $20,000, and had been in court fifteen years the plaintiff in the mean time having been reduced to the verge of bankruptcy, by the expense and delay. Mr Webster set forth the wrongs an injuries which the plantiff had suffered by reaso of the alleged evasive conduct of the defendan and the long and vexatious delay in the most impressive and powerful manner. In conclusion h declared it the rule of common sense was not govern courts in their deliberations—they mig be looked upon as nuisances, rather than the e ponents of justice.

NEW STORE,

AND AN ENTIRE NEW STOCK OF

New and Cheap Goods.

GEORGE C. VARNEY & CO.,

HAVE great pleasure in informing their former patrons and the public generally, that having completed their NEW STORE, on the same site occupied by their old one, at

No. 13 Front Street, Salem.

they are now opening a full, complete, and well selected assortment of.

WEST INDIA GOODS,

AND BEST

FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to disnose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have but one price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a percentage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition to the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assistance to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerous patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

LORRAINE'S PILLS.
All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by things that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them finds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills!! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yours respectfully, J. E. F. MARSH.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 1843

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills, we have sold all we had last. They have given very good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours, E. MASON.

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 1844

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtue, of Lorraine's Pills, I had no faith whatever, but I took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirefy left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully, W. M. HALSTAL

Sir. I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent—all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

A hacking cough constantly annoyed me!

BOSTON, Mass., June 1st; 1844

Sir,—In February last, I took a sudden cold, after which a hacking cough constantly annoyed me, and this, combined with my other maladies, rendered me truly miserable, as everybody told me that I was in a consumption. EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

NEW ENGLAND
TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. John Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with descent of the roctum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for people of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, thatof pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effectedby them in different parts of the earth. How here purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with ful directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamation of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all cases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extensively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

LET US RETURN.

"Let us return!" said the broken heart
Of the mountain hermit's tale—
When he saw the mornings mists depart
From the summits grey and pale:—
For he knew that the fan-palm cast the shade
Of its ever-glorious green,
Where the love of his blasted youth was laid,
And the light of her steps had been.
Ah! thus forever, the heart looks back
To its young hope's funeral urn;
To the tender green of that early track.
To its light let us return?

The lines of our life may be smooth and strong,
And our pleasant path may lie
Where the stream of affection flows along,
In the light of a summer sky:—
But woe for the lights that early wane,
And the shades that early fall,
And the prayer that speaks of the secret pain,
Though its voice be still and small!
To the sweeter flowers, to the brighter streams,
To the household hearths that burn
Still bright in our holy land of dreams,—
To their love let us return!

'Tis well we have learned the truths of time,—
But they came with the winter's snow,—
For we saw them not through the flowery prime
Of our summers long ago:
Yet the spring is green and the summer bright
As they were in the days of yore,
But on our souls the love of light,
Of their gladness come no more!
Back—back to the wisdom of the years
That had yet no loss to mourn,—
To their faith which had no place for tears,
To their joy, let us return!

We have paused, perchance by the quiet grave
Of our young who early slept,—
And, since they left us, many a wave
O'er our weary bark hath swept;—
But, far in the morning light enshrined,
They gladden our backward gaze,
Or wake, like the breath of a summer's wind,
The soul of our better days.
Back—back! to the living wave, we drew,
With them from a purer urn,—
To the path of promise lost to view,
And its peace—let us return!

OH WEAR FOR ME NO SABLE HUE.

Oh! wear for me no sable hue,
No garb of blazoned grief—when I
Shall bid this gladsome earth adieu,
And fling my spirit's garment by!

Nor mark the spot with urn or stone,
Where worthless dust unconscious, lies;
Within your loving hearts alone,
The monument I ask, should rise!

And shed for me no bitter tear,
Nor breathe my name in mournful tone;
Your smiles 'twas mine to waken here,
And I would think them still my own!

Nor link my image with regret—
A pleasant memory I would be;
To consecrate and brighten yet
The scenes that once were dear to me!

Ah! why should tears bedew the sod
Where some beloved one's ashes rest?
The soul rejoiceth near its God,
And can ye mourn that spirit blest?

Then weep not for the loved one fled
To realms more pure—a home more fair;
And call not the departed dead!
She lives—she loves—she waits you there.

MISCELLANY.

THE QUAKER'S DAUGHTER.

A STORY OF OLD SALEM.

The annals of the year 1658 will ever present a blot on the historic pages of New England, and the lifted veil discloses a fury of religious intolerance, and a violence of persecution, which darkly stains the character of those who, in other respects merit our highest encomiums.

It was during the popular fury in New England against the Quakers, that the occurrences which I am about to relate took place. Before a small, unpainted house in Salem, on a beautiful summer evening, sat an old man and a fair girl, his daughter. Their faces but illy concealed the anxiety of their hearts, and a listener might easily have seen that their fearful forebodings were not unfounded.

"Verily," said the old man after a pause in the conversation, during which he had appeared to be engaged in inward prayer—"Verily, the hand of persecution is heavy upon us. Surely it was the fear of the tender mercies of the wicked in this place, that caused my own Rebecca, to go down to the grave ere yet the grasshopper had become a burden as it has to me. And now, poor William, what will become of him?—Twice has he suffered the cruel sentence of an unrighteous law for visiting you, my daughter. I pray God that he may not have the temerity to return."

"Amen," with blanched cheeks and tearful eyes, ejaculated the maiden. Her anxious attitude—her clasped hands, all told a tale of deep affection. To William Hoarsely had her youthful faith been plighted, while yet she was in her native England and the extent of affection may be imagined, when it is remembered that twice, as the reader has already been informed, had he then been publicly whipped for venturing within the precincts of that town from which he had been banished. The penalty for the third offence was death, and yet in spite of the danger, had he dared week after week to visit her whom he loved, and her remonstrances only served to heighten his passion for one who, in her love for another, thought not of herself.

Long and anxiously did the father and daughter converse about their future prospects. They could not suppose that known as they were to be Quakers, they could long live unmolested, but there was in the breast of each a carefully nourished hope that their perfectly harmless and quiet life might at least, avert for a time the storm which they felt to be gathering.

But those hopes were vain. As the two arose to retreat to their dwelling from the night air and dew, their attention was arrested by loud voices, and the tread of heavy feet. Shortly a partly of rough, ill-favored men stopped at the door of their humble house, and freely entered and seated themselves within, began to pass the usual rough jests which the presence of unprotected beauty will always excite in the minds of the brutal and unfeeling.

The visit filled the beautiful Quakeress with undisguised alarm; she was wholly unprotected, for her father appeared stupefied by the before unheard of liberties with his property, and said not a word; but by the occasional flash of his eye at some new outrage, it was easy to see that in his younger days a much smaller injury would have called forth something besides angry looks.

The object of their coming was soon made manifest. "The town can't allow you to cumber this ground any longer. So stir your stumps and be off. If you're here at six o'clock to-morrow morning, by the whiskers of the virgin, you shan't have a roof to cover you."

"I obey," said the old man meekly.

"But as for this little sparrow," continued the ruffian, "if she can fancy me, she shall go home and live with me. What say you my dear?"

The girl replied with an indignant gesture.

"! I know how the wind lies. I've seen that Horseley around here before now; but hark ye, you know his fate as well as I do, if he ventures into these parts again. So warn him, for I am on the look out."

The distress and alarm depicted on the girl's countenance was so evident that the fellow stopped, and after reiterating his injunctions to the old man, the band took a welcome leave.

"The Lord's will be done," said the Quaker after a short pause, "let us obey those who have the power."

A short time was consumed in making preparations for their departure, but ere their arrangements could be completed, the old man was stricken down with a burning fever. The unusual excitement had been too much for him, and hastened a disease, the symptoms of which he had felt for a day or two.

For some minutes after the truth broke upon the mind of the daughter, she remained stupified, not knowing whither to turn. All their Quaker friends (and they had no other) had deserted the place. Her lover, she knew would fly to her assistance, if he could but be made acquainted with her situation, but his presence would but increase her anxiety, and in any case, she knew not where to find him.

But her strong mind soon discovered the only course in her almost hopeless situation. The house she was aware, would be sacked in the morning, and if she was discovered, nothing could save her from public disgrace. Food and medicine, too, must be obtained for her father, and the only way to get it was to leave him, returning at night.

To a little ruined outhouse at some distance from their dwelling, she carried a bed, and having rendered the place as comfortable as possible, he carried the old man thither, and having nursed him until morning, she early left him, not without fearful forebodings. Nor were her fears entirely groundless. In the morning the house was ransaked and stripped of every valuable. But the hovel from its mean appearance, was not visited, and the ensuing night, having during the day wandered twenty miles for food and medicine, as she dared not to enquire for it nearer, she returned to her father, who, although dangerously ill, appered to be sleeping quietly.

For more than a week the devoted maiden thus watched by night, the sick bed of her father, and she already begun to look forward to the time when he could rise from it, and seek with her, and one other, whose name she was too modest to breathe, a far off spot in the wilderness where they might dwell in peace, when one dark night, as she was hastening along the road to the Quaker's bedside, she felt herself clasped around the waist by no very gentle hands, and at the same time a voice not altogether unknown to her ears, cried out, "Hillo, my darling sparrow what now? I thought as much from seeing the track of a pretty foot round the old place this morning. Going to get what we've left, eh? You slighted me the other day," continued he in a louder tone, as she commenced a faint struggle, "and by the bones of my mother, you shall now smart for it."

Completely exhausted with fatigue and terror, the little Quakeress was dragged along by the men until she was brought to the prison, into which, after some short delay in examining the prisoner, she was thrust, receiving as she went, the gratuitous intelligence that every thing was prepared for giving her a public whipping in the morning.

It was not until the key was turned upon the poor girl in the lonely cell, that the full horror of her situation struck her. Shame and disgrace she felt she could bear in the way of her duty, but to be publicly whipped—it was too much. Her sensitive nature shrank from the pain and exposure. The old Quaker too; what would become of him? The forsaken girl fell on her knees, and long and earnestly did she pray for deliverance for herself, and health for her father.

And deliverance was not far off. As she rose from her knees a light tap at the window arrested her attention. A voice that she well knew, pronounced her name. She flew to the spot, and a joyous kiss through the iron bars, showed that she well knew who was there.

But her happiness vanished when she thought of their mutual danger. She gently reproached her lover for exposing himself to so great risk, and earnestly entfeated him to leave her to her fate and save himself. But William Horsely would listen to no such counsel. Having heard of their situation, he had hastened to their assistance and arriving near the house, was a witness to the capture of his betrothed. He delayed only enough to provide himself with some necessary implements, and appeared, as we have seen, at the window of the prison, determined to rescue his beloved or perish in the attempt.

Animated by love, he worked with a zeal to which the presence of the Quakeress added not a little. And in two hours their united efforts had removed enough of the bars to enable William to draw her through the opening. It is needless to say that the hopes of the blood-thirsty were disappointed; and that the lovers escaped free.

They found the old Quaker so far recovered that with great exertions, they were enabled to remove him to a place of comparative safety, about three miles distant, whence, a short time after, they removed to one of the extreme frontier towns in New Hampshire, where the usual consummation to such romances took place; and one of their descendants, from whom, last summer, I obtained the heads of this true story, is now living on the banks of the Winnipiseoge.

DESPERATION.

The following is a passage from the laughable tale of 'Desperation,' one of the rich articles which are embraced in the 'literary remains of the late Willis Gaylord Clarke.' It is only necessary to premise that the writer is a Philadelphia student, who, after a stolen fortnight amid the gayeties of a Washington 'season,' finds himself (through the remissness of a chum) at Baltimore on his way home, without a penny in his pocket. He stops at a fashionable hotel nevertheless, where after tarrying a day or two, he finally, at the heel of a grand dinner, 'omnis solus' in the private apartment, flanked with abundant Champagne and Burgundy, resolves to disclose all to the landlord. Summoning a servant he said:

'Ask the landlord to step up to my room, and bring his bill.'

He clatters down stairs, giggling, and shortly thereafter his master appeared. He entered with a generous smile, that made me hope for 'the best his house could afford,' and that, just then, was credit.

'How much do I owe you?' said I. He handed me the bill with all the grace of private expectancy.

'Let me see—seventeen dollars. How very reasonable! But my dear sir, the most disagreeable part of the matter is now to be disclosed. I grieve to inform you that, at present, I am out of money, but I know by your philanthropic looks that you will be satisfied when I tell you that if I had it, I would give it to you with unqualified pleasure.

'But you see my not having the change by me is the reason I cannot do it, and I am sure you will let the matter stand, and say no more about it. I am a stranger to you, that's a fact; but in the place where I came from, all my acquaintances know me, as easy as can be.'

The landlord turned all colours. Where do you live, anyhow?'

'In Washing——, I should say Philadelphia.'

His eyes flashed with angry disappointment.—'I see how it is, Master; my opinion is, that you are a blackleg. You don't know where your home is, you begin with Washington and then drop it for Philadelphia; you must pay your bill."

'But I can't.'

'Then I'll take your clothes; if I don't, blow me tight.'

'Scoundrel!' said I, rising bolt upright, 'do it if you dare! do it! and leave the rest to me!'

There were no more words. He arose deliberately, seized my hat, and my only inexpressibles, and walked down stairs.

Physicians say that two excitements can't exist at the same time in one system. External circumstances drove away, almost immediately, the confusion of my brain.

I rose and looked out of my window. The snow was descending as I drummed upon the pane.—What was I to do? An unhappy 'sans culloles' in a strange city; no money, and slightly inebriated. A thought struck me.

I had a large, full cloak, which with all my other accoutrements, save those he took, the landlord had spared. I dressed immediately; drew on my boots over my fair drawers, not unlike small clothes; put on my cravat, vest and coat; laid a travelling cap from my trunk, jauntily over my forehead, and flinging my fine long mantle gracefully about me, made my way through the hall into the street.

Attracted by shining lamps in the portico of a new hotel, a few squares from my first lodgings, I entered, recorded some name on the books, and bespoke a bed. Every thing was fresh and neat; every servant attentive; all augured well. I kept myself closely cloaked; puffed a cigar, and retired to bed to mature my plot.

* * * * *

Waiter, just brush my clothes well, my fine fellow," said I, in the morning, as he entered my room. "Mind the pantaloons; don t spill anything from the pockets; there is money in both."

"I don't see no pantaloons."

"The devil you don't! Where are they!"

"Can't tell, I'm sure; I don't know, s'elp me G—."

"Go down sir, and tell your master to come up here immediately." The publican was with me in a moment.

'I had arisen and worked my face before the glass into a fiendish look of passion. "Landlord?" exclaimed I, with a fierce gesture, "I have been robbed in your house—robbed, sir, robbed! My pantaloons, and a purse containing three fifty dollar notes, are gone. This is a pretty hotel! Is this the way that you fulfill the injunctions of scripture? I am a stranger, and I find myself taken in with a vengeance. I will expose you at once if I am not recompensed."

"Pray, keep your temper," said the agitated publican, "I have just opened this house, and it is getting a good run; would you ruin its reputation for an accident? I will find out the villian who has robbed you, and I will send for a tailor to measure you for your missing garment. Your money shall be refunded. Do you not see that your anger is useless?"

"My dear sir," I replied, "I thank you for your kindness. I did not mean to reproach you. If those trowsers can be done to day, I shall be satisfied; for time is more precious than money.—You may keep the others if you find them, and in exchange for the one hundred and fifty dollars which you give me, their contents are yours."

The next evening, with new inexpressibles, and one hundred and forty dollars in my purse, I called on my guardian in Philadelphia for sixty dollars. He gave it with a lecture on collegiate dissipation, that I shall not soon forget. I enclosed the money back to my honorable landlord, by the first post, settled my other bill at old Crusty's the first publican, and got my trunk by mail.

A LUDICROUS YANKEE NOTION.

We are firm believers in the true efficacy of the adage "laugh and grow fat," and it is with no ordinary effort that we constantly strive to profit by the injunction—he never enjoys a joke by which he cannot make something. "What is it worth to me?" is the question he asks of himself before he ventures to laugh.—All are not so, however, as we remember a case in point.

There was a clock pedlar who made a "heap o' shiners" by vending wooden clocks (perchance nutmegs and hams) in the slave States, and who in the course of his peregrinations reached a town in Arkansas. The day before his arrival, a slave stealer, who was sentenced to receive one hundred lashes at the whipping post, had escaped from jail, and it so happened that our Yankee clock merchant bore a striking resemblance to the escaped culprit. The poor pedlar had scarcely completed his task of shutting up his wagon and seeing his "animal" well bestowed before the manger, ere he was seized by the town constable and carried to jail, in spite of his protestations that he never stole a black sarpint of a nigger in all his life. The constables knew they said, that he was the man, and in two hours the sentence regarding the whipping was carried into effect.

Sure enough the time came. Our Yankee was led to the post, and, as they say on board of a man-of-war, "seized up."

The first lash fell. Our Yankee laughed aloud and seemed to enjoy the flogging with great relish; for until the fifteenth lash he had laughed and shouted with great glee. The whipper paused in the exercise of his vocation, looked at the culprit with amazement, and then resumed his task, muttering that the man was certainly deranged. To make a long matter short, the sentence was entirely carried into effect; still our Yankee kept up his mirthful cachination.

The sheriff standing near, said to him, "why this seems to me to be a very serious—a very serious matter, rather than a laughing one."

Wal, I know," continued the Yankee, indulging in the broadest kind of guffaw, "but it tickles me like thunder to see how darnably you are all sucked in. Why, I aint the man.

And still chuckling over the "suck in" his floggers had experienced, he went his way.

THE PRESIDING ANGELS.

Sterne has given a beautiful allusion to the "accusing spirit of the recording angel" that watches over the actions of men. Yet impressive as his representation and figure truly is, we think it is even surpassed in the following parable once related to a traveller by a Turkish dervise. "Every man has two angels; one upon his right shoulder and the other upon his left. When he does anything good, the angel on his right shoulder writes it down and seals it, because what is once well done, is done forever. When he does evil, the angel upon his left shoulder writes it down but does not seal it; he waits till midnight. If, before the time, the man bows down his head and exclaims 'Gracious Allah! I have sinned! forgive me,' the angel rubs it out; but if not, at midnight he seals it, and the angel upon the right shoulder weeps."

Now this may be thought by some a barbarian vagary as altogether unworthy of notice or comment; but if we admit the existence of angels, spiritual messengers of Heaven, the idea of presiding angels seems not so preposterous after all. If we substitute for the phrase "one upon his right shoulder," a continual sen e of the presence of God, and a conviction that good alone will prosper, we come to an important fact attested in all ages and corroborated by the experience of man, that he who does good has the witness in himself of the pleasure and peace consequent on well-doing. Let one save a child from drowning; deliver his fellow-man from the jaws of death, dry an orphan's tears or bind up one broken, widowed heart, and whether we say "an angel writes it down and seals it," or whether we speak in the language of Scripture "he shall not lose his reward," there is not so much difference in the manner of expressing the truth as many might at first imagine. We are so constituted, and it is a powerful evidence of the Divine hand, that good, benevolent actions produce the highest earthly bliss. What can exceed the pleasure of doing good? It is this alone that can make us happy and

"Spite of cormorant devouring time
Shields us from rasure of oblivion,
And makes us heirs of all eternity."

On the other hand, when evil is done, when revenge has executed its dark and bloody deed, when hatred and lust and envy have done their work, if an angel does not write it down, it is nevertheless recorded, its seal is set, its mark is graven as with a pen of iron. The bad man may flee the judicial power, he may escape the l which is armed for his destruction; he may "unwhipt of justice," so far as human sanctio are concerned; but he cannot escape Ominpote he cannot hide from God. The keen sword conscience, the sharp goadings of remorse fangs of guilt will follow him, and there is no cape from Him who has said "though hand join hand the wicked shall not go unpunished." that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong he hath done." If the poor Arab or the wild s age of the forest, has religion which teaches him the two recording and presiding angels, we there is a moral power in it, and there is many even among us Christians who seem to need s such restraining influence. The above repres tation of the Turk may be fabulous and false, there is one thing certain: "The eyes of the L are in every place beholding the evil and good."—Golden Rule.

Interesting Instance of Sugacity and Devotio a Dog.—Yesterday morning, the dog of a blind man whom we have noticed in ano column, gave a proof of intelligence and atta ment to his master, which struck us as ceedingly interesting. The animal had cros State street, and the old man was follow his steps, relying implicitly on the sagacity his canine friend for safety. At this mom a carriage turned the corner at a moderate t but in a direction which threatened to bring into dangerous contact with the old man's son. The watchful animal, the moment he pied this, sprang towards the carriage at bound and seizing a spoke of one of the whe in his teeth, was thrown over and over sev times during its revolutions. The blind escaped unhurt. In a human being, such an would have been termed heroic—if any hu being would have done as much.—Boston Tra

One of the very best epigrams which has been produced in the English language, is the lowing, made by Warren Hastings after he been some ten years the victim of Burke's wit ing persecution:

'Tis oft asserted that on Irish ground
A poisonous reptile never yet was found;
Revealed the reason stands of Nature's work
She spared her venom to create a Burke!

An Elephant Hunt in Africa—"Well, th will begin. Lieutenant Moodie was out phant hunting with a party of officers and diers, when one day he was told that a la troop of elephants was close at hand, and several of the men were out and in pursu them. Lieutenant Moodie immediately se his gun, and went off in the direction wher heard the firing. He had forced his through a jungle, and had just come to a cl ed spot, when he heard some of his people ing out, in English and Dutch, 'Take care, Moodie, take care.' As they called out heard the cracking of branches broken by elephants as they were bursting through wood, and then tremendous screams, suc we heard this night. Immediately afterwa four elephants burst out from the jungle, two hundred yards from where he stood. ing alone on the open ground, he knew th he fired and did not kill, he could have chance; so he hastily retreated, hoping the animals would not see him. On loo back, however, he perceived, to his disn that they were all in chase of him, and ra gaining on him; he therefore resolved to res his fire till the last moment, and turning wards some precipitous rocks, hoped to them before the elephants could come up to But he was still at least fifty paces from rocks, when he found that the elephants within half that distance of him,—one large animal, and three smaller,—all in a as if determined that he should not esc snorting so tremendously that he was stunned with the noise." "That's what I a very pretty position," observed the Majo "Go on, Swinton; the affair is becoming a nervous." As his only chance, Lieute Moodie turned round, and levelled his gun a largest elephant; but unfortunely the pow was damp, and the gun hung fire, till he in the act of taking it from his shoulder, it went off, and the ball merely grazed the of the elephants's head. The animal halte an instant, and then made a furious ch upon him. He fell; whether struck dow the elephant's trunk he cannot say. The phant then thrust at him as he lay, wit tusk; fortunately it had but one, and more tunately it missed its mark, ploughing u ground within an inch of Mr. Moodie's b The animal then caught him up with his t by his middle, and dashed him down bet his fore feet to tread him to death. On pressed so heavily on his chest, that all his b bent under the weight, but, somehow or o whether from the animal being in a sta alarm, it never contrived to have its w weight upon him; for Mr. Moodie had n lost his recollection, and kept twisting his and limbs, so as to prevent it obtaining a d tread upon him. Whilst he was in this of distress, another officer and a Hottentot ter came up to his assistance, and fired sev shots at the animal, which was severely w ded, and the other three took to their hee At last the one who had possession of Mr. die turned, and, giving him a cuff with its feet, followed the rest Mr. Moodie got picked up his gun, and staggered away as as his aching bones would permit him. He his brother, who had just been informed by of the Hottentots who had seen him unde elephant, that he was killed. "Well, that an escape,' observed Wilmot. "What r it more remarkable was, that he had ha time to explain to his brother his miracu preservation, before he witnessed the dea one of the hunters, a soldier, who had attracted the notice of a large male elephant which had been driven out of the jungle. The fierce animal gave chase to him, and caught him immediately under the height where Mr. Moodie and his brother were standing, carried the poor fellow for a short time. The elephant then returned, as if to make sure of its destruction; for it kneeled down on the body, and kneaded it with his fore legs; then rising it seized it again with its trunk, carried it to the edge of the jungle, and hurled it into the bushes."—Narrative of Captain Marryatt.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 13, 1845.

WHIG STATE AND COUNTY CONVENTION.

We call the attention of our Whig friends to the notice in our columns for a meeting ☞THIS EVENING☜ to choose delegates to attend these conventions. We hope there will be a good attendance at this primary meeting and that such delegates will be sent as will truly represent the feelings and views of the Whigs of Danvers on National as well as State policy.

DANVERS THIRTY YEARS HENCE. NO 2.

We continue our extracts from the Courier of 1875, in illustration of the probable state of things at that date, making only the single remark, that if we do not represent them just as they will then appear, nobody can prove that we are in error and all must await the result to find whether our predictions are true or false. Some of the extracts, it will be seen, relate to matters not immediately concerning our town but which may be interesting to show the probable advance in public opinion on subjects now in agitation.

War in Patagonia. The goverment paper says that the war which existed between the two tribes of half civilized people of the southern part of this continent, has been brought to an end by the influence of the agents of our government and those of the several European powers. Since war has been denounced by all the civilized nations, these have made strong and successful efforts to abolish it among the savage tribes. The enormous expenditures formerly needed in warlike preparations, are now well bestowed on internal improvements and institutions of science, learning and humanity.

Ex-President Everett. We are concerned to hear that this venerable statesman has had another attack of an apoplectic kind, and that his friends have strong fears for the result. His mental faculties seem not to be in the least affected.

Savings Bank. The Annual Report of this institution shows a very gratifying result. We shall give extracts in our next. The Trustees are about to erect a new granite building at the corner of Osgood and Tapley streets.

Walnut Grove Cemetery. The Proprietors of this beautiful cemetery, have voted to erect an iron fence on the two sides bounded by the streets.—The beautiful hedge on the remaining boundary is to be allowed to grow a few feet higher, that the grounds may be more secluded from the dwelling houses adjoining.

Manufactures at the South. We learn that the cotton spinners at Lowell and other manufacturing cities are turning their attention to the finer descriptions of cotton goods such as have heretofore been imported from England. This has become necessary on account of the great competition in the coarser fabrics from recently established factories in the southern states. Since the passage of the "Gradual Emancipation Act" by Congress, and its acceptance by most of the southern states, the people of the south have become strongly attached to the protective policy, and have enjoyed a higher state of prosperity than ever before.—South Carolina and Texas are the only states which have not accepted the conditions of the Act, but we understand that its benefits to those which have adopted it, are so manifest, that no doubt exists but both these states will join their sister republics in their humane policy, and that slavery will soon be entirely abolished.

THE HIGH SCHOOLS. The annual examination of the pupils of the High Schools, took place yesterday, at the City Hall, and was highly creditable to teachers and scholars. In the evening those pupils who had received prizes, were invited Gov. Osborne, to an entertainment at his residence. Among the guests present was Mr Valentine, Superintendent of the Virginia State Normal School, and who was once a teacher in one of the public schools in this place, His Excellency Governor Osborn being then a pupil under him. Mr. V. alluded to the above fact in his address to the pupils, and to the singular fact that His Excellency is only the second Governor of the Commonwealth who has been chosen from Essex County since the adoption of the Constitution.

Oregon Railroad. We learn by the Astoria Chronicle, that this gigantic enterprize will be completed in about six weeks. Great preparations are making in Astoria for a public reception of the first train of cars from this side of the Rocky Mountains. All the rails for this road were made of Pennsylvania and Missouri iron.

Our Manufactures. At the last Mechanics' Fair in Boston, Medals and Diplomas were granted to several of our principal manufacturers. Some of the most beautiful Ginghams were from the establishment of Putnam & Sons; and the best specimens of cutlery were from Tapley & Co's Factory. The Danvers Manufacturing Company received a gold medal for the best Alepines and Bombazines; and the Lace Company a silver medal for their superior fabrics. Large orders for our woolen goods have lately been received for the English market, the low price of our wool giving us a great advantage over the British manufacturer.

CITY COUNCIL. The petition of John Carnes and others, for an Engine to be located on Crane St. was referred to the appropriate Committee.—This populous street has been entirely built up within 30 years. It formerly was called "Dark Lane," and was then very narrow and crooked.—

SINGULAR. While the workmen were digging for the foundation of the proposed stone building for a Merchandize Depot, two pieces of iron were found, each resembling the tongue of a bell. An aged citizen who was present, stated that many years ago, the bell of the South Church was twice robbed of its tongue, and it was always supposed that they were concealed near this spot. Many of our citizens can recollect the time when the space now occupied for the Railroad Depot, was a mill-pond; and it is asserted that alewives and even shad have been known to run up this stream to Spring Lake. If so, there must either have been in those days more water than at present, or the fish must have had the faculty of travelling by land.

MASSACHUSETTS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY. This Society has been in existence many years, and together with many similar associations was established to discountenance the use of intoxicating liquors as a drink. It has funds still accummulating, which occasion much perplexity to its officers, as since the total disuse of those liquors in the community, there is no use to which these funds can legally be applied. We learn that it is proposed to dissolve the Society, in which case the disposal of the fund will probably be a subject for legislation.

ORDINATION.

On Wednesday last, the Rev. Richard Tolman was ordained pastor of the Third Congregational Church and Society in this town, we are indebted to a correspondent for the following notice of the exercises:—

1. Introductory Prayer, by Rev. Dr. Emerson, of Salem.
2. Hymn.
3. Sermon, by Rev. E. N. Kirk, of Boston.—Text—Hebrews 13, 17. "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you."

The subject of the discourse, was, the obedience which churches owe their pastors.

1. They must obey them, not as receiving their power from civil authorities.
2. Not as receiving their power from eclesiastical authorities.
3. Neither should they obey them as law-givers:—but
4. They should yield obedience to them as the servants of Christ, receiving their commission from Him and interpreting His commands.

1. They should respect them.
2. They should have confidence in them.
3. They should love them.

Three motives were adduced to enforce obedience.

1. A sympathetic regard for their pastor.
2. A regard for Christ.
3. A regard for their own interest.

The discourse was replete with practical instruction and sound sense. The style of composition was chaste and graceful, and the delivery eloquent.

4. Ordaining prayer, by Dr. John Codman, of Dorchester, which was solemn, affectionate and pathetic, and like as a father would pray over the child of his heart, and drew tears from many eyes.
5. Chant.
6. Charge, by Rev. L. Withington, of Newburyport. This was delivered in the usual concise, laconic and original style of that eminent divine.
7. Right hand of fellowship, by Rev. T. P. Field, of this town, which was affectionate and deeply touching. It seemed like a brother indeed, welcoming a brother to participate with him in the joys, the cares and responsibilities of the Christian ministry.
8. Hymn.
9. Address to the Church and Society, by Rev Mr. Pickett, of Reading, and was highly interesting, instructive, and well adapted to the occasion.
10. Concluding prayer, by Rev. Mr. Mann, of Salem.
11. Anthem.
12. Benediction, by the pastor.

The music, solely by the choir of the society, under the direction of Mr. Parker Francis, was good, and listened to with apparent delight by the audience, and would have been much more effective, had not the orchestra been crowded with a dense mass of human beings. The day was pleasant, and nothing occurred to mar the solemnities of the occasion.

The Society over which the Rev. Mr. Tolman is now settled, has been recently formed, and is in a flourishing condition. A neat and beautiful house of worship has been erected on an eligible site, and the labors of the pastor commence under happy auspices.

It may perhaps be interesting to state, that the Rev. Mr. Tolman is the last of thirty young men who have been educated for the ministry, from the Rev. Dr. Codman's church in Dorchester—Rev. Mr. Withington, of Newburyport, being the first. Dr. C. preached the ordination sermon of all these young clergymen excepting the last; and would have preached his had he arrived from his recent tour to Great Britain, a few weeks earlier. Such an instance is of rare occurrence, and is worthy of a passing notice.

THE UNITED STATES CONVENTION OF UNIVERSALISTS. This body has held its Annual Session in Boston the present week. There has been an unusually large attendance of both clergy and laity. The Annual Sermon was delivered by Rev. E. H. Chapin, of Charlestown.

THE DISTRICT SCHOOL READER BY WM. D. SWAN. We have had an opportunity to examine this work which has just come from the press, and is the concluding volume of a series of reading books by the same author. This is intended for the higher classes in our schools and we predict that it will be found upon trial to be worthy to take the place of those now in use, not so much on account of the selection of the reading lessons, but also of the arrangement of the exercises in articulation, the rising and falling inflections and rhetorical rules. We had previously examined the other reading books of Mr. Swan, and regard the entire series as well calculated to make good readers.

CURIOUS RELIC.

Last week as the workmen employed by Mr. Wingate Merrill, Surveyers of highways, were excavating a bank of earth in what is usualy called the "Trask field" near the old burying ground, they came to what appeared to have been an old well, filled up, and among the earth, they found fragments of clamshells, old wrought nails, and a curiously formed silver plated spoon the bowl of which is in the form of a label and the handle terminates in the shape of a small flattened knob. There is a small circular stamp in the bowl of the spoon in the centre of which is the representation of a heart pierced by an arrow, and on the circumference the words DOUBLE WHITTED. This is no doubt the stamp of the manufacturer and the use of the v for u as well as the singular shape of the article denotes the great antiquity. Its age may probably be reckoned by centuries, and it is impossible to tell how long it has been in the place when it was found, which was about three feet from the surface of the ground.

☞On Wednesday last, at the Court of Common Pleas, in Newburyport, WM. D. NORTHEND, Esq. of this town, was admitted to practise at the bar, as Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

New Dry Goods Store. We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Mr. M. T. DOLE, who has taken the store recently fitted up in the basement of the house owned by Mr. Ellis. Mr. Dole has a splendid assortment of goods, and purchasers would do well to give him a call. We think our citizens must be satisfied that it is better to purchase their goods of those who are well known as honest and regular dealers, rather than take the risk of being imposed upon by the trash which is frequently brought here and forced upon us by sham auctions. It has long been our opinion that the less we have to do with these strolling merchants the better.

☞We have received a communication from E. in reply to that of F. in our last, which we regret to be obliged to postpone to our next, owing to the crowded state of our columns.

JOHN. B. GOUGH,

The celebrated and eloquent temperance lecturer after having been missing in New York for about a week, was found Friday, Sept. 12, in one of the loathsome dens of pollution which abound in that city.

Various conjectures have been formed as to how he came there, but the latest accounts from that city fail to explain the matter.

CHRISTIAN COURTESY.

A correspondent of the Salem Gazette, writing from Marblehead, states that on Sunday last, Rev. Mr. Bartlett, the Unitarian clergyman of that town, being unable from indisposition to preach, requested Rev. Mr. Lawrence, the Orthodox minister, to occupy his pulpit. The latter having a supply for his own desk, promptly accepted the invitation and preached in Rev. Mr. Bartlett's church in the morning, Rev. Mr. Niles, the predecessor of Mr. Lawrence, preaching in the afternoon. We cannot commend too highly the catholic spirit which prompts to such kindly feelings, and wish it was more prevalent among religionists of every name.

At the seventh Annual Meeting of the New Mills Watchers' Society, Dr. E. HUNT was elected President, and Wm. Endicott, Sec. for the ensuing year. A committee of three was chosen to invite all the citizens of the School District, of suitable age, to become members of the society.

It was also Resolved, as the sense of the society, that it is the duty of every male citizen of School District No. 2, of the age of eighteen years and upwards (unless disqualified by infirmity or otherwise) to become members of the society.

The following extracts from its constitution will show in some degree how it is managed.

Article 3. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the Society, and the Secretary shall keep a fair record of the doings of the Society, likewise a Box with the names of the members therein, from which he shall draw as the occasion may require. He shall notify all meetings of the Society, the members of their turn to watch, and shall act as Treasurer. In his absence he shall appoint some person to perform these duties.

Article 4. Any person residing in the District, wanting watchers, may call upon the Secretary who shall draw one or more names, and who shall provide experienced watchers when necessary—and the member so drawn shall watch as required, or provide a substitute, provided the member thus drawn is not confined to the house at the time by sickness. No member shall be required to watch but once until the whole number is drawn from the Box.

Letter from Cassius M. Clay.—We find in the Cincinnati Gazette, of Sept. 11, the following letter from C. M. Clay. It is written in reply to a letter from the Cincinnnti Committee, appointed at the meeting of the citizens of that place to take some measure relative to the Press of the True American. Their letter is dated August 27. The Committee inform him that the Press is safe and insured, and tender him their services, in any way in which they can aid him.

LEXINTON, Ky., Sept. 4. 1845.

GENTLEMEN: I have just received your letter of the 27th ult., enclosing the proceedings of the citizens of Cincinnati and their resolutions in public meeting.

Their words of kindness and generous appreciation and noble and dignified avowal, have moved me more than all the studied cruelties and wrongs of my enemies, though I was unnerved by disease, and threatened, for long days and nights, with a horrible death.

I thank you, that you have not allowed the calumnious manifesto of the revolutionists of the 18th of August to weaken your confidence in my loyalty to the Constitution and laws. I thank you, that you have seen nothing in the past to cause you to lose confidence in the future, that my "measures and means" will be "safe, practical and peaceable." I thank you, that you may deem my "work high and holy," and for the reverent and soul sustaining invocation of Divine protection on me and on it.

You, gentlemen, have taken me on trust; the time for my defence will come with my re-established health; when, I venture to say, your sentence will not be revoked by "Kentucky and the world."

I shall allude to only one charge going the rounds of the papers—that there was a compromise between me and the Rebels of the 18th, and I agreed to discontinue the publication of the True American provided they would spare the press. It is unnecessary for me to say to you, who have seen my letter addressed to the meeting, as well as my previous handbills addressed to the people, that this story is calumnious and morally impossible. It is enough that the Committee of Sixty have authorized the Lexington Observer and Reporter to state that no such proposition came from me or any of my friends. This attempt, therefore, to degrade me, on the part of those who failed to destroy me, is of a piece with this whole outrage of cruelty and wrong, as I shall be able to show as soon as my health will allow.

I hope I shall be able to show that I am neither a "madman" nor "lunatic."

They who sent back from Thermopylæ the sublime message, "Go tell it at Lacedæmon that we died here in obdience to her laws,"—the Roman who returned to captivity and to death that his country might be saved—Sydney, Hampden and Russell—Emmett, who uttered the mighty instincts of a great soul, "the man dies but his memory lives"—Adams who exclaimed "Survive or perish, I am for the declaration"—Henry, who cried "Give me liberty or give me death" were all, in the eyes of these men, "madmen" and "fanatics,

It was necessary that some one should bear the standard of Liberty into the enemy's camp and by so doing, whether he stood or fell, arouse this great nation from the lethargy and death, which have come over the spirit of a once free people.—It has been the policy of wise statesmen in all ages, to clothe the humblest citizen with the concentrated power and inviolability of the whole empire. It was enough for one amidst the wildest barbarians to say "I am a Roman citizen," and he was safe. No country in Europe is so careful of individual and national glory, as France, the first nation of Europe, and England, but a few years ago, was ready to peril her thirty millions of lives on the rescue of a single subject. It cannot, therefore, be less than madness in the American people, if they expect long to live as a nation, and not to fall an easy sacrifice to a foreign aggression, or internal anarchy and despotism, to look coolly on, when even the humblest of those contending for constitutional liberty and national honor are overborne and trampled down in the battle. Surely that nation cannot live long, far less be free that sees time after time whatever of spirit and manly independence may any where exhibit itself, crushed and utterly extinguished.

I thank you, then and the people of Cincinnati, my fellow citizens, men gathered under the same national Constitution, to which I owe allegiance, and which owes me protection, brothers of the same blood, inheriting the same proud recollections of the past, and looking in the future to the same inseperable destiny, that you have not cowered before the slave power; but that you stood by the friendless, the powerless, the fallen and dared to speak out for constitutional republicanism and eternal justice, which have been violated in my person. Above all, am I deeply affected by the fact, that you assembled in "mass meeting" without distinction of party; and as both parties here are lost in overwhelming subserviency to slavery so you of the Free States begin to unite in the defence of your own rights and in the cause of national liberty.

If the Whigs and Democrats and Liberty men shall become really what they assume, then is half my 'work' accomplished, and the Republic safe—for though my State should sink into irrevocable despotism, there will be left somewhere on this wide continent, a home for the exiled and the oppressed.

With regard to the Press, I would briefly remark, that my banner. 'God and Liberty,' will never be struck.

Though overpowered by numbers, I have the same uncouquerable will and defiant spirit as though the day had not against me. It is for those who fight for the wrong, to despair in defeat.

I shall not "die through mortification," as my enemies would have it. I trust I shall yet live to see those who, on the 18th of August, 1845, rose in arms, overpowered the civil authorities and overthrew the constitutional liberties of the State, and established on its ruins an irresponsible despotism, hurled from their usurped places of fancied security and Kentucky yet made free.

If, however, this be a vain hope, still I will not repine, for I should feel prouder to have fallen with her honor, than to have ingloriously triumphed with my enemies over the grave of the liberties of my country. With gratitude and admiration, I am your friend and obedient servant,

C. M. CLAY.

Mr. Hartshorn, the agent for New England, of Mr Clay's True American, has received a letter from him, dated Lexington, Kentuckey, September 5th, in which he writes: 'The mob will not stop my paper. Somewhere, I will go on, soon. In the meantime, you may proceed to get subscribers, in all confidence. My defence against the manifesto and and wrongs of the mob, when out, will be sent to you, in advance of the papers.' In conclusion, Mr Clay says: 'My health is yet bad, but improving slowly.'

Execution of Green. The sentence of the law in the case of this wretched man, was executed today, at 4 o clock, P. M., in the jail at Troy.—The criminal appeared in a state of great physical prostration, but seemed to meet his fate with a composure of mind in some degree suited to the awful event. He is said to have made a full confession of guilt, and he died acknowledging the justice of his punishment, and with a prayer for mercy on his lips. About 300 persons were admitted within the walls of the prison, and a large crowd waited outside.—[Albany Evening Journal 10th.

The one vote majority for which Gov. Morton has become so renowned, seems to stick to the family and the party. Just as the polls were closing on the second ballot, at the office holder's Convention on Wednesday, a delegate came in and asked permission to cast his vote. It was granted—and he deposited the ballot which gave Isaac Davis the majority. That delegate was Gov. Morton's son.—[Springfield Republican

FOR THE COURIER.

WATCHERS' SOCIETY.

Mr. Editor—It may not be uninteresting to many of your readers, to learn something in regard to the operations of a Society, which was organized at New Mills Village, Sept. 15th 1838 under the name which heads this communication—and which has been in successful operation since that time; and sure I am, that could all be made acquainted with its practical benefits, more of these societies would spring up around us.

Formerly the duty of watching with the sick, devolved upon a very few individuals, who made themselves more acquainted with sickness than others; and it was also attended with some difficulty to obtain watchers in long cases of sickness, not more so than in other places, nor was it because all did not express a willingness to take their share of the duty, but it was not always convenient, some other time would be pretered, and many other excuses would be offered, thereby subjecting those needing watchers to great inconvenience, and sometimes obliging them to call on many before one could be obtained, for it is a fact that there are very few if any, but what prefer a night's sleep to watching with the sick, notwithstanding we often hear the remark, "I'd as lieves set up as not," (a remark, by the way, of which I very much doubt the truth.

Our Watchers' Society has been in operation seven years, and although many were opposed, and objected to the organization at first, yet after seeing its operation, and receiving its benefits, but very few can now be found who do not belong to it. It now consists of ninety members. For the regulations of this Society, I refer the reader to another column containing its constitution, &c.

At our annual meetings, the Secretary reports the number of watchers called for during the year; with whom watch'd; how the cases of sickness terminated, &c. &c. thereby giving us a record which may be useful for reference in future years.

We can judge of the advantages of such an association only by its practical operation, and those who have been so unfortunate as to require its services, are unanimous in their expressions of satisfaction.

Our object is to take care of the sick, and have the duty equally borne by those in health.

I hope that these few suggestions may be the means of calling the attention of the citizens of this and other towns, to the expediency of forming such associations in their neighborhoods. If it does, my object in writing this communication will be accomplished. Any further information can be obtained, in regard to its management and success, by consulting almost any individual belonging to New Mills.

B.

We are authorised to state that all who wish to attend the Whig Convention at Boston the 24th, can obtain tickets of the Western Railroad for $3,15, to go down and back, from Springfield.—This is a reduction of one half, and we hope it will have the effect to bring out a large delegation from Hampden County. The tickets will hold good for the three days viz: the 23d, 24th, 25th. A similar reduction will be afforded to those attending the Convention from other towns on the line of the road. [Springfield Republican.

☞The regiment of Artillery, comprising the Salem, Gloucester, Lynn and Newburyport companies, and the Lynn Rifle corps, were reviewed Friday, on a field on the bank of the river, near the Plum Island Turnpike. There were probably 3000 spectators on the ground, several hundred of whom were from the adjacent towns.—We have never before, in this vicinity, seen so many vehicles together. Good order prevailed through the day, and there was no drunkenness, quarreling or disturbance of any kind, as far as we could perceive. Many of the spectators evinced much disappointment that there was no sham fight.—Newburyport Herald.

Democratic Convention. The democratic convention for the nomination of a candidate for Governor assembled at Springfield, on Wednesday.—Henry Crocker, of Barnstable was chosen President. At the first balloting for Governor, Isaac Davis, of Worcester had 189 votes, Charles G. Greene of Boston 180, and Frederic Robinson 100. At the second ballot, Mr Greene declined running, and Mr Davis had 241, just a majority, Henry W. Bishop of Berkshire, had 140, and Federic Robinson 88. The Convention then unanimously confirmed Mr Davis's nomination. Mr Bishop was selected as the candidate for Lieutenant Governor, the usual resolutions were passed, and the Convention dissolved.

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfect ease and safety.

Mr Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

LORRAINE'S PILLS.

All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by thing that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them fiuds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured aud able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills!! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yours respectfully,

J. E. F. MARSH.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 1843

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills, we have sold all we had last. They have given very good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,

E. MASON.

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 1844

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtue, of Lorraine's Pills, I nad no faith whatever, but I took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirefy left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,

W. M. HALSTAL

Sir. I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent—all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for peopleo f all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetab les from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, thatof pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effectedby them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with ful directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamatiou of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creaturcs can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to directionf. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

POETRY.

THE DISINTERRED WARRIOR.

BY W. C. BRYANT.

Gather him to his grave again,
And solemnly and softly lay,
Beneath the verdure of the plain,
The warrior's scattered bones away;
Pay the deep reverence taught of old,
The homage of man's heart to death,
Nor trifle even with the mould
Once quickened by the Almighty's breath.

The soul hath hallowed every part;
That remnant of a martial brow,
Those ribs that held the mighty heart,
That strong arm, ah! 'tis strengthless now.
Spare then, each mouldering fragment spare
Of God's own image—let them rest,
Till not a trace shall speak of where
The awful likeness is impressed.

For he was fresher from the hand
That formed of earth the human face,
And to the elements did stand
In nearer kindred than our race.
In many a flood of madness tost,
In many a storm has been his path,
He hid him not from heat or frost,
But met them and defied their wrath.

Then were they killed—the forest here,
Rivers and stiller waters, paid
A tribute to the net and spear
Of the red ruler of shade.
Fruits on the woodland branches lay,
Roots in the shaded mould below:
The stars looked forth to teach his way,
The still earth warned him of his foe.

A noble race! but they are gone,
With their old forests wide and deep,
And we have built our homes upon
Fields where their generations sleep;
Their fountains slake our thirst at noon,
Upon their hills our harvest waves,
Our lovers woo beneath their moon—
Ah! let us spare at least their graves!

COMMUNICATION.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—The use of the letter E. that I have placed under my communications, has become very insipid to your correspondent F., and he has in consequence honored me with the title of the "gentleman at the Plains". For this act of courtesy I will try to make due returns, and as he objects so strongly to my use of his real name and seems to have some regard to locality in selecting one for me, I propose to distinguish him as the North Danvers Representative. As he and the public are generally aware who I am, I hope he will now be able to quiet his fears about being shot by some Indian in disguise. The self-complacency he exhibits in speaking of "vilifying honest and justifiable actions" must be very consoling, and I hope no one will disturb it by doing any such naughty thing. The "application of truth" that I have already made to the conduct of the N. D. R. may not have had time to "work an effectual cure," yet it has enabled him to throw off a considerable quantity of bile which may operate well and encourages the hope, that by persisting in the use of this wholesome prescription he may be improved It is evidently very nauseous to the stomach for in all his long and studied articles he has not had the candor to allude to some of the principal facts that I have stated as the grounds of the opinion I had expressed. I would say as regards the public relations which the N. D. R. and myself sustain to each other, that I esteem it the duty as well as the privilege of the people, to express freely their opinion either publicly or privately on the conduct of their rulers, and to give the facts on which their opinions are founded. If they do this in sincerity they do not justly incur the censure of any one, if they err in their opinions the people have the facts to correct the mistakes they may make. When any of our rulers does public acts prejudicial to our interests, and in opposition to their own avowed opinions of what would promote the good of their constituents, I think we ought to put them on their defence, and if they can explain so as to satisfy their constituents, that they acted right, all is well, if not the public will be the better prepared to act with reference to them in future, and I do not think it becomes the dignity of our rulers to manifest much resentment in such cases. It would seem from the hard expressions and insinuations published by the N. D. R. that he thought I had committed the most outrageous wholesale attack upon his honor ond integrity merely because he had done "honest and justifiable actions." I believe that all I have done is to express the opinions that there must have been some extraordinary appliances to have induced the N. D. R. to do as he did, and have given some facts as my reasons for this belief, I may have erred in this opinion and I wish the gentleman to have the fairest opportunity to make his defence and I trust that if he should convince me that I am mistaken, that I shall have the magnanimity to acknowledge it.

Much of the long history which the N. D. R. has compiled, and a large portion of his remarks appear to me to have but a very remote bearing upon the question at issue, but seem like an ingenious device to divert attention from the question. A summary of this history may be stated in a few words: there was a petition to the Legislature by the citizens of Danvers and other towns, for a road to Malden, and also one by Mr. Neal, for a branch to North Danvers. On the order of notice on these petitions, a town meeting was held, and resolutions were passed strongly in favor of our petition and also one against Mr. Neal's petition, on account of the Ferry, and a large committee of nine persons chosen "to represent the town before the committee of the Legislature, and to adopt all such measures to advance the interests of the town as they may think proper." But in all the "array of evidence" presented by the N. D. R., not one word is said about instructing the Danvers Representatives; and for the very good reason that they are chosen to look after the interests of the town, and to seize every opportunity to advance its interests. I verily believe that this part of the gentleman's defence is the result of an after-thought for in all the conversations that I have ever had with him I cannot recollect that he ever alluded to these instructions, and some of my neighbors who had frequent conversations with him, are confident that they never heard him speak of them, but that he had much to say about the South Parish being opposed to the branch, but be that as it may, I wish him to have all the benefit of what there is. The resolutions of the town were passed before any survey had been made of the road, or any particular estimates or calculations had been made, by which the town could truly understand the merits of the case, the petitions were the means employed to bring on a full examination of the merits of the case, none of us could tell what the result of the enquiry would be, and therefore the town chose this large committee to act for the interests of the town as circumstances might require. Before and during the examination, the N. D. R. and myself did all we could to favor Pingree's petition, but after an attentive hearing of the evidence, we became convinced that we had not made out a case, and that the Malden branch could not succeed, and that the branch from the Eastern Railroad "was the best thing we could have, and the only thing we should get, and that if we did not get it then we might never get it." I think he expressed this opinion to me before I did to him, and in the most confident and emphatical manner, and now he has the grace to taunt me with having changed my opinion—so far at least we were equally consistent, and agreed very well. When he reconciles his own inconsistency in changing his mind, I think I shall have no difficulty with mine.

After this, when the reports of the committee were known, the N. D. R. sent an express word to me from Boston, by one of my neighbors, earnestly requesting me to call a meeting of the committee "in order that they might know what to do." A meeting of the committee was accordingly called, and held, and they discussed the subject about two hours, and voted to request our representatives to get the bill amended so as to have the branch extend to North Danvers, and that it should be done if at all, with the consent of the town. During the discussion of the committee, some of them expressed the strongest determination to have the "bill killed," but little did we think at that time that the N D. R. would have been made the executioner!

It is certainly the duty of the Representative to cause all bills to be made as perfect as possible before they are passed into laws: here was a bill before the Court, that if passed with the amendment proposed by the committee, would give the town the power to obtain the best thing that could be had, and if it was not had then, it was doubtful whether it could ever be had, and it left it at the option of the town to say whether they should have it or not. The bill, in fact, would have been an offer to the town of what the N. D. R. considered the best thing they could have—the question for him to decide was, whether he would allow this offer to be made to the town, and he said No!

The gentleman says, he could not follow the advice of the committee—first, because it was so contradictory." Was there any contradiction in a request to have the two propositions placed in the best possible form, for the town to avail itself of the benefits of either one, or both, or neither of them? And he says, secondly, if he had proposed an amendment, it would have conflicted with the action of the town, and shown a lamentable want of sagacity in them to have permitted the petition of the town to have been referred to the next General Court, and then permitted a bill to pass the House, which would have forever forbidden any one from disturbing its quietus. If the town did not consent to have the branch, could they not call up Pingree's petition? A slight "appeal to reason and common sense," in answering these questions I think will put the quietus to such arguments, if it does not show a lamentable want of sagacity in making them.

The N. D. R. has made a most admirable display of the pains he experiences in exercising his power of putting me to shame, by exerting his power of retort. It seemed to me that he was a-going to say something, and I guess he thought he did. The gentleman called at my lodging, at about eleven o'clock and staid until after twelve: I wonder if he can tell anything that was said or done—how can I reply to such a retort?

There are some minor points that I should have been glad to have noticed; perhaps I may have an opportunity after the gentleman has made another "application of truth."

Since writing the above, I have seen one of the committee, who says he was very much surprised at the course of the N. D. R., and seeing him soon after the Court rose, he asked him how he came to do so, and he replied that the reason was, that the South Parish folks were all opposed to having the bill passed with the amendments; and they said it would make such a quarrel and division between the North and South parts of the town, that it would destroy all harmony; and to save the town from this, he consented to do as he did—but not one word was said about instructions of the town.

Can any one doubt that some extraordinary appliance must have been made to cause the N. D. R. to believe that the amendment and passage of this harmless bill (that left the whole subject with the town) could have caused such dreadful consequences? How long since the gentlemen found his instructions?

E.

MISCELLANY

DEACON MARVEL.

The Deacon was a man who never did any thing by halves—who never made two bites at a cherry, as his family history will show.

Acting on the spur of those new feelings which had sprung up in his bosom, he went resolutely forward in his purpose of decorating the village green with "an elegant meetin'-us." and by a singular coincidence, the corner stone of the edifice was laid on the very day which made him the father of two lusty boys.

The foundation of the church being laid under such auspicious circumstances, and with such omene of fertility and speedy increase, the work went on with great vigor and high hope. A spacious frame-work was erected upon this foundation, roofed, shingled, clapboarded and painted with surprising expedition. The inside of the church was not so speedily completed, and in consequence of some unavoidable delay, it was determined to open the "Church" for worship at once, but to postpone the formal dedication till the whole of the work was completed.

Accordingly, as soon as the lower floor was laid, and then the pews and pulpit erected, although scarcely anything had been done to the "gallery," public worship was held in the new house Loose planks were arranged in the gallery to accomodate "the singers," and the crowd of urchins that always swarm around the highest seats in our synagogues. To keep these boys in order, as well as to lead the music, (for he was both tything man and chorister,) the Deacon took his seat also in the gallery. Alas! he little foresaw the catastrophe that awaited him, but in happy security joined in the psalmody, pouring forth a cataract of melody, and making the ears of the audience to tingle with the rich nasal twang of his stentorian voice.. The psalms were sung, the prayers were prayed, and the chosen chapter of Holy Writ had been read, when the venerable Elder Mack rose in the pulpit and announced the text. At that unlucky moment, the attention of the Deacon was caught by the grimace of a young rogue who was "taking off" the Minister, surrounded by half a dozen others ready to split with suppressed laughter. The spectacle was intolerable.

"The sight no longer Blount could bear!
By heaven and all its saints I swear,
I'll hit his head a knock!"

The angry Deacon sprang furiously forward to visit the pate of the offending urchin with an admonitory rap, trod thoughtlessly, but with all his weight, on the unsupported end of an unfastened board, and the next moment, to his utter amazement, found himself making a flying leap into the midst of the congregation below. He landed most gracefully astride the neck and shoulders of a corpulent old lady, who sunk under the tremendous shock of his descent into the bottom of the pew, kicking and screaming "like a shot deer or a hurt duck." The Minister paused in the midst of his text, and the whole congeegation arose as though they were about singing the doxology, and every head was turned towards the pew in which the flying Deacon and the fat woman had so mysteriously disappeared. For a moment not a sound was heard—but all was appallingly still; so that Elder Mack began to fear it was all over with both Deacon Marvel and Mrs. Broaders. But sounds soon broke upon the stillness of the people—sounds which indicated that a desperate struggle was in progress, attended with no little wrath, pain, affright and confusion. The Deacon had nearly stunned Mrs. B. by his fall, while she in her turn almost annihilated him by the manner in which she crushed his unfortunate legs beneath her mountainous weight. Rustling and struggling, groaning, kicking and something that sounded awfully like cursing, rose in horrid discord from the invisible pair, and at last just in time to prevent a general rush of the people to the pew, the lantern jaws of the Deacon appeared above the rail,—looking as red and fiery as though his phiz actually was a lantern with a dozen lamps burning within, followed by the broad, blowsy and indignant face of the unhappy victim of his assault, more red if possible than his, looking like the full moon through an evening mist; two together presenting in conjunction a spectacle beyond description ludicrous and extraordinary.

"Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note!"

The Deacon limped back to the gallery, amazingly crest-fallen, while Mrs. B., with a vain endeavor to restore her crushed bonnet and rumpled ruff to decent and christian trim, hobbled out of church and did not again make her appearance for a six month.

Five minutes, however, sufficed to reassure and compose the sturdy Deacon, so that he seated himself on the cross beam of the gallery, with his feet dangling over the broad aisle, and began to meditate on the "special providence," as he considered the affray from which he had just escaped.

Alas! for our hero! he would have been a wise man, had he gone home like the lady upon whom he alighted so unceremoniously.

Silence having been restored to the congregation, Elder Mack recommenced his discourse.—Like most of the old fashioned preachers, his method of analysing and arranging his sermon was, to divide them into some eight or ten heads, each head being sub-divided into three or four more heads; thus resembling some of the strange monsters, with their heads and horns, seen by St. John in the Apocalypse. In fact the preaching of Elder Mack's discourses was like the conflict between Hercules and the Hydra, in which one head of the beast was hardly cut off and disposed of before two others started up in its place.

The minister had now proceeded triumphantly through his "seventhly!" for upwards of an hour had his gutteral monotony fallen like a gentle optate on the senses of his hearers, and he was just ready to grapple with his 'eighthly,' when his attention was arrested by the head of Deacon Marvel, which had gradually swayed from its perpendicularity, until his chin was now buried in the bosom of his vest, and his body seemed nodding to the cadences of the speaker's voice.

The truth is, Deacon Marvel was asleep. Either he had been kept awake by the squalling babies, the night before—or his recent fall had so stunned his faculties as to make him lethargic.

At every emphatic word, as if the Deacon attended to the discourse even when sleeping, his head nodded, and every nod seemed to bring him nearer the floor. The parson was dismayed; what should he do? Once already had the Deacon flown from the gallery, and now it appeared he was about to repeat the experiment, and alas, with no subjacent fat woman to break his fall!

Suppressing a momentary rising of wrath and mortified vanity, Elder Mack resorted to several innocent artifices to rouse and save the slumbering saint. He lifted up his voice like a trumpet, nod went the head. He lowered his tones to a gentle murmur; nod, nod. He pounded the pulpit with his clenched fists, nod, nod. The sweat started on his brow and trinkled down his nose in his excitement, and with his eyes rolling in a sort of phrenzy, he slammed the big Bible upon the desk with a tremenduous noise; nod, nod nod, as before.

The audience were surprised and delighted with the unwonted energy of their old parson; they imagined he had received from on high a new inspiration, little fancying where he borrowed his ardor. And now, Elder Mack, growing desperate, began to hurl texts of Scripture at the unsteady head of the sleeper. 'It is high time to awake out of sleep,' cried he. But in vain, Deacon Marvel did not heed it. 'Wo to them that are at ease in Zion,' he shouted. The Deacon nodded his assent. 'Awake, O sleeper and arise!' yelled the maddened divine. The only answer was another nod, and a most threatening lurch of the Deacon's whole body.

Elder Mack could stand it no longer, but called out at the top of his voice, 'Deacon Marvel! Deacon Marvel! it is hard preaching to a sleepy congregation!' The Deacon's head flew to its place at once and before he could command his tongue, he thundered back, 'Elder Mack, Elder Mack, it's a darned sight harder listening to a sleepy sermon!" The effect of this retort was irresistable, and the assembly broke out in a paroxysm of laugh ter.

From the Philadelphia Saturday Courier.

The Frigate's Tender: or the Ruse.

BY J. H. INGRAHAM.

CHAPTER I.

It was early or a sunny morning during the progress of the last war with Great Britain, that a young naval officer, walking on the Battery at New York, had his attention drawn to a group of persons earnestly engaged in watching two vessels just visible far down the harbour.

"What is it my friends?" he asked, in a frank, hearty tone, as he joined them.

"The tender, again, chasing in a schooner, sir," answered an old tar, touching the point of his hat as he noticed the anchor button on the officer's coat.

"Here is a spy-glass, sir," said a master's mate who stood near, and at the same time respectfully handing it to him.

"Thank you, my man," answered the lieutenant with a smile, as he took the instrument and placed it to his eye.

By its aid he could clearly distinguish an armed schooner, of about ninety tons, crowding sail in chase of a trading "fore-and-after" that was making every exertion to escape, both by towing and throwing water upon her sails.

"The chase is about half a mile ahead, sir," said the master's mate; but the tender sails like a shark in chase of a dolphin. The fore-and-after don't stand a chance of getting in past the fort."

"That tender can sail, and I am the one that ought to know it," said a stout, weather-beaten looking man. "She was a pilot boat, and the fastest craft that ever danced over the waves.—Three weeks ago I and my crew were out in her, when yon English frigate suddenly made her appearance out of a fog bank and brought us to.—But I took to my yawl, and pulled for the land a league away, and escaped; for the fog was so thick the Englishman could not get a glimpse of me. It is my schooner they have turned into a tender, sir, and that's made so many captures the last three weeks of our small coasters."

"She carries forty men, and a long thirty two, so I hear," observed a seaman in the group.

"And is commanded by a luff and a reefer," added the master's mate.

"It would be a blessing," observed a man-of-war's-man, who had not yet spoken, "if that craft could be caught napping. It an't safe for a sloop to put her nose out of the harbour, beyond the cape; but while the frigate was there alone, they could slip along the coast in light water, and show her their heels. But now, everything that ventures out is brought to by that long gun of the tender's."

"That's a fact, Ben," responded another seaman. "She has taken or driven back into port no less than twenty-six craft in the last three weeks. I shall be glad, for one, when our frigate lying off there gets her armament aboard; for then I think we'll swallow the English frigate outside, and pick our teeth with the tender."

All these remarks were heard by the young officer, who all the while continued to look through the spy-glass at the tender and her chase.

"There goes a gun!" cried several of the spectators, as a flash and a jet of azure smoke came from the frigate's bows.

"That is bold enough," observed the young officer, as if speaking his thoughts aloud; "the impudent tender is almost up with the fort, and dares to fire at the chase in the very face of the batteries."

"It is only to try and do her mischief, sir," said the master's mate: "for she finds the fore-and-after will escape her—so she fires a gun to cut away something."

"You are right, my man," responded the officer "for she has put about and stands seaward again."

He continued to watch the retiring tender for some moments in silence.

"It's a pity we had n't an armed cutter in port that would sail faster than she can, so that we might give her a chase out," said a lad, approaching the group. His dress was that of a midshipman, and his air singularly free and fearless,

"Ah, Frank, are you there?" said the lieutenant. "When did you get back from your father's?"

"Last night. I was in hopes to find the ship ready for sea. Mr. Percival; but I am told it will be three weeks before we can get away. I want to have a brush with John Bull's frigate, who hovers off and on the harbour with such bravadoing. When did you get in town sir?"

"Yesterday morning. Have you been witnessing the pretty chase down the bay, Frank?

"Yes. I would give a year's pay if I could have a hand in capturing that rogue."

"Come aside with me," said the officer, putting his arm in that of the midshipman. "Your words but express my own wishes. I have conceived a plan for capturing that tender."

"In what way, sir?" demanded the youth, with animation.

"I will show you. The tender's game appears to be the coasting vessels, from which she takes men to impress in the British navy, and also plunders the craft of such things as they contain which are of any value. My plan is to charter an old sloop, the worst looking one that is possible to find in port, yet a tolerable sailer, for she must work well and readily obey her helm. I will load her deck with hen-coops, filled with poultry, pens crammed with pigs, and a few sheep, and a calf or two, by way of variety. You laugh, Frank: but the commander of the tender will find it no laughing matter, if I succeed as I anticipate. I shall ship about thirty-five men, and conceal them in the hold, and taking command of my craft with one hand only visible on deck, I shall set sail out of harbour. When I get outside, I think I shall be able to show John Bull a yankee trick he will not be likely to forget very soon. But all will depend on our good management of the affair. Now you see what I would be at, Frank! Will you join me?"

"Heart and hand, sir," responded Frank Talbot with enthusiasm "Will you allow me to be the hand on deck to help work the sloop?"

"Yes, if you can talk Weathersfield yankee."

"Wall, I raythor guess I ken, tho' I ant been to Connecticut among 'em sins last grass!"

This reply was pronounced in such an inimitable yankee dialect, that the lieutenant burst into a hearty laugh.

"You will do, Frank! Now we want to proceed at once to action. I want you to go to the Anchor rendezvous in Pearl street, and drum up about five and thirty men. Take only those that are daring and ready for anything. Let none of them know your object, lest we should be betrayed by information being conveyed to the tender. You will find enough in these times, that will ask no questions. Meet me at twelve o'clock at the Exchange reading rooms, and report to me."

The midshipman then took his leave and hastened up the battery. The lieutenant returned to the group, and taking aside the master's mate, whom he knew, laid briefly before him his project The old tar entered into it with zeal. Together they went to the docks, where, on account of the blockade, lay idle a large number of vessels of every description. They were not long in discovering such a craft as suited them: a Hudson sloop of seventy tons. She was immediately put in trim for sailing by the master's mate, and three or four men whom he employed; while the officer proceeded to buy up and send on board his live stock.

CHAPTER II.

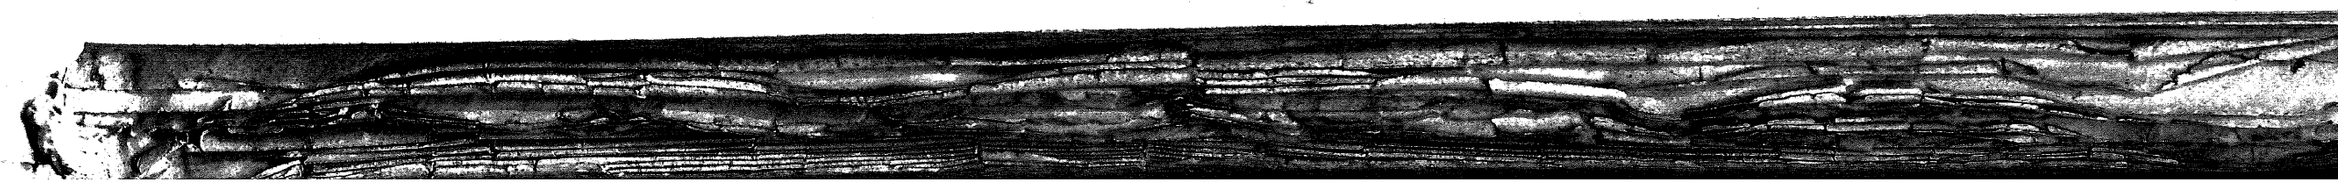
The morning following these events, the tender of the British frigate was standing off and under easy sail, and close in with Sandy Hook, The wind was from the south-west, and blowing about a five-knot breeze. The sky was without a cloud, and only a gentle undulation lifted the surface of the ocean. The tender was a clapper-built vessel, very long and narrow in the beam, and constructed wholly with an eye to her fast-sailing qualities; and she gave proof of them by overhauling everything. She carried amid-ships a long thirty-two pounder. Her crew consisted of about forty men in the uniform of the British navy.—They were now principally assembled in the bows and on the windlass, talking together or watching the shore. Aft, the officer of the deck, a bluff full-faced young English "midy," was lounging over the quarter railing smoking a cigar. The man at the helm had a sinecure of his post, for the vessel skipped along so easily that she seemed almost to steer herself.

'Sail ho!' cried the look-out, from the heel of the bowsprit.

'Where away?' quickly demanded the officer.

'In shore, two points forward the beam!'

'Aye, aye! I see!' answered the middy, levelling his glass at a sloop just stealing out the harbor, closely hugging the shore. 'It is another of the yankee coasters. A sail in shore, Mr. Staley!' said he, speaking through the sky-light.



The lieutenant, a stout, fleshy, port-wine visaged John Bull, came on deck and took sight at the stranger, which was about a league distant.

'It is a lumber sloop; but we will bring her to. if she dares to venture out: for we may get some fresh provisions and vegetables from her if nothing more.'

"Shall I put her on the other tack, sir?"

"Not yet. Keep on as we are, till the sloop gets an offing. If we run for her now, she will take refuge in the harbor!"

The sloop stood out for half a mile, and then hauling her wind, beat down along the land. The tender delayed the chase until she had got too far from the entrance of the harbour to get back again, and then putting about, run for her so as to cut her off. The sloop seemed to take alarm, and putting about, began to make the best of her way towards the harbour she had left. Confident in the speed of his own vessel, the English lieutenant felt satisfied that the chase was already his, and laughed at the efforts of the sloop to get away.

At length they came near enough to see that her decks were covered with pigs and poultry.

"A rare haul we shall make this morning!" said the middy. "Enough chicken pie for the whole of the frigate's crew, to say nothing of turkies and roast pig for the cabin!"

"What a regular slab-sided Yankee skipper she has at her helm! Man and boy, she has a stout crew!" said the lieutenant, laughing. "They look frightened out of their senses, as they begin to think they are gone for it! Sloop ahoy!"

"What ye want?" came across the water, in the strongest nasal of Yankeedom.

"I want you to heave to, brother Jonathan!"

"I'd rayther not, if it's all the same to you! I'm in a mity hurry! Frank!" added the disguised American officer, in an under tone, "when I order you to let go the jib, you must draw it aft as hard as your strength will let you. I at the same time will put the helm hard up, so the sloop will pay rapidly off, and fall aboard of the tender, for I am determined to fall aboard of her. I shall curse your blunders, and order you to let go; but don't mind me; keep pulling the jib-sheet hard to windward. Leave the rest to me. Now, my men," he said, speaking through the companion-way, "take a good grasp of your pistols and cutlasses.—When I stamp my foot on the deck over your heads, throw off the hatches, leap on deck, and follow me."

"Heave to, or I will sink you! What are you palavering about?" shouted the Englishman.

The two vessels were now side by side, steering on the same course, abeam of each other, the tender to leeward and about a hundred fathoms off.

"Wall, don't be too free with your powder, and I will. Aminidab, let go that 'ar jib sheet!"

"Yes, I will," answered the young reefer; and with a hearty will he began to draw it to windward. At the same moment the American officer put his helm hard up, and the sloop rapidly payed off right towards the tender.

"Let go that jib sheet!" shouted the English officer.

"Yes, Aminidab, you 'tarnal fool you, let it go, I say! Let it go! Don't you see we are coming right aboard the capting's vessel?"

But "Aminidab" pulled the harder, and fairly took a turn with the sheet about a belaying pin.

The English officer was about to pour out upon him a volley of oaths, when, seeing that the sloop would certainly fall foul of him, he turned to give orders for the protection of his own vessel; but, ere he could utter them, the sloop's bows struck her near the fore rigging, and swung round stern with stern. At the same instant, the American officer stamped upon the deck, and forty armed men made their appearance from the hatches, forecastle and cabin, and leaped after Percival upon the tender's deck.

The Englishman, taken by surprise, surrendered without scarcely striking a blow; and getting both vessels under sail, in the very sight of the frigate the gallant young captor sailed with his prize back into the harbor, and safely anchored her off the battery, after an absence of six hours and twenty-seven minutes.

This exploit is doubtless one of the boldest and most spirited affairs that came off during the war. The account given above is a faithful narrative of the transaction, and the chief circumstance will be recognized by the brave officer in question, as well as by his friends.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 27, 1845.

THE WHIG CONVENTION.

Rarely if ever has a Convention been held in Massachusetts, more respectable in character and numbers, more united in feeling, more harmonious in action, and more cheering in hope and promise, than that which met in Faneuil Hall on Wednesday last. At an early hour of the day the doors were thrown open, and before ten o'clock the old Cradle of Liberty was filled to overflowing with a throng of men, gathered from all parts of the Commonwealth, their faces beaming with intelligence and honest pride, and their hearts beating high with a lofty sense of patriotic duty, assembled together as good citizens once more to pledge themselves to guard the honor and welfare of the State which has secured to them through long years so many and inestimable privileges and blessings.

After the usual preliminary pro tem. arrangements, the Convention was duly organized by the choice of Seth Sprague, jr. of Duxbury, as President, assisted by numerous Vice-Presidents and Secretaries. Upon taking the chair, Mr. Sprague acknowledged in proper terms the honor conferred upon him, and made some general remarks, appropriate to the occasion, upon the position and principles of the Whig Party. The Rev. Mr. Rogers of Boston then offered prayers; and as the whole assembly rose up and with reverential manner united with the gifted Divine in imploring the presence and blessing of Almighty God, there was no one in that vast multitude who did not feel with grateful emotion, that the same purity of purpose and religious faith which inspired the Pilgrim Fathers and the Whigs of the Revolution, and led them safely through all their troubles, still animated the hearts of their sons and gave earnest of a bright and happy future.

The Convention then proceeded to the important business of the day, the nomination of candidates for the respective offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. For some time past insinuations have been thrown out by our political opponents that there was dissension in our ranks, and a difference of opinion as to the man whom we should propose for the Gubernatorial Chair.—As if to give the most pointed rebuke to such calumny and falsehood, there was no discussion of rival claims, not even any balloting—but by a universal, instantaneous voice, by general acclamation and hearty cheers, the proclamation went forth that the Whigs of Massachusetts clung with unabated love to their well-tried champions, and once more inscribed upon their banner the honored names of BRIGGS AND REED.

After these nominations had been made, and a Committee had been chosen to draught an address of the Delegates to their constituents, the People, the Convention listened with delight to spirited and eloquent speeches from R. C. Winthrop of Boston, and Myron Lawrence of Belchertown, upon the general grounds of Whig principles and policy, and their claims to the cordial support and co-operation of all good citizens. The Convention then adjourned until three o'clock, P. M.

At the hour appointed for reassembling, the Hall was again filled, and Joseph Bell, Esq. of Boston, submitted and read the Report of the Committee chosen in the morning. It was a most stirring and powerful appeal to the Whigs of the State, and when published and extensively circulated, as it will be, cannot fail to produce a great and happy effect. Its adoption wss moved by Mr. Stevenson of Boston, in one of the best and most thrilling speeches we ever heard. He was followed by Abbott Lawrence, and Samuel H. Walley, jr., with their accustomed and well-known ability—and it really seemed good, after a whole year of cessation from political excitement, once more to hear the time-honored watchwords of our Party, and the ancient and eternal truths of our creed.—The hour was now late; and having adopted the Address of the Committee, the Convention finally adjourned. Thus ended the Whig State Council for the year 1845. Its proeeedings were characterized throughout by the happiest spirit, and will be productive of the most beneficial results. As the Whigs, when they were leaving the place sacred to so many hallowed memories, turned and raised their voices in a round of cheers which pealed and rung through the lofty arches of those old walls, the Father of his Country, and the worthy Founders of the Commonwealth, seemed to bend from the canvass where they live in glory, to pronounce a benediction upon the labors of the day and promise a bright and glorious triumph.

And now, Fellow Citizens, the campaign is opened and our leaders are in the field. The war is begun, and on its issue hangs the honor and the welfare of our ancient and beloved Commonwealth. We are to fight for that conservatism, and law and order, and good faith which are the safeguards of our prosperity,—against that radicalism which substitutes passion and prejudice for principle and reason, and whose object seems to be to level every bulwark of rational liberty. If we do our duty, the State is safe. The intelligence and virtue of the people are with us and need but to be aroused and led into action, to secure us certain victory. Let us then be up and doing. Let us show that we prize the precious heritage we enjoy, and are determined to defend and maintain it. Let old Massachusetts still stand up before the country and the world as she ever has done, the chosen home of good government and social happiness.—

AMERICAN LEATHER IN ENGLAND.

It will be recollected by our readers, that in an article some time since on the exportation of leather to England we predicted that the experiment of shipping this article to that country would probably fail on account of the inveterate prejudice of Englishmen to every thing not English, and that this prejudice must be overcome by a close imitation of their own productions, in quality and appearance. Sufficient time has now elapsed to know the results of the first shipment, which have all been unsuccessful and from the cause above stated We hope this failure will not discourage further attempts to introduce this important staple into the English market. We are convinced, that with our advantages for the cheap and rapid manfacture of leather, we can undersell the British manufacturer and satisfy the people there of the equality if not the superiority of our own tonnage. We think just the right mode of effecting this desirable object has been hit upon by some highly respectable parties in the Leather trade in New York, who have engaged the services of an experienced shoe manufacturer of this town, to go to England and superintend the making of shoes of American Leather, by English workmen. It seems almost certain that this undertaking will not only succeed, but be highly profitable to those concerned, as the difference in the cost of our leather compared with the English, will afford a good chance for profit, and after the leather is made up, the difference of kind will be scarcely perceptable to the purchaser.

We think we do not over estimate the importance of the English market to the Leather trade when we declare that it will be of as much importance to that interest as the opening of the ports of China, for the admission of Cotton goods, has been to the manufacturer of cotton cloths. We heartily wish the project every degree of success, not only on account of those enterprising individuals immediately interested in it, but for the advantage it will be to the whole Leather trade of the country.

Although English prejudice is so strong against every thing foreign, that even educated men of that country believe that one Englishman is equal to two Frenchmen, and that there is no comfort beyond the shores of their little island, instances are not uncommon of this prejudice having been overcome by Yankee ingenuity. When we sent our beef and pork to England, Mr. Bull turned up his nose at it until it was cut up and packed in the British style, when it at once became quite palatable. So it was with our butter and cheese, the latter article particularly, which is now in great demand and in extensive use in that country. John received our wooden clocks, flattered as he was by the reflection of his own bluff features as he looked into their mirrors, and the superiority of the Lake Wenham Ice was too clear not to be seen through, even by an Englishman.—These changes in the direction of articles of export, either coastwise or foreign, are so familiar to those who recollect the time when Danvers supplied Albany with wool, and the city of New York with Sole Leather, that they need not be much astonished to find the staple manufacture of our town finding its way to a foreign market.

CATTLE SHOW AT IPSWICH.

This Annual Festival of the farmers of Essex County took place on Wednesday, and although the day was rainy, the attendance and show of animals and manufactures was quite respectable. The Address by Rev. Mr. Stone is spoken of as excellent, and the Report of the Treasurer represented the finances of the Society as in a flourishing condition. At the election of the officers, JOHN W. PROCTER, Esq., of this town, was chosen President of the Society, that office having been last filled by the lamented SALTONSTALL. We learn that in consequence of the brief time allowed to the Committees for the performances of their duties, it is contemplated to have two days assigned for the Show and Exhibition next year.—This appears to us to be a very desirable reform, as too much business is now crowded into a short space of time.

Mr. Alley's great Hog. We learn that this celebrated individual of the swinish race—snout, bristles and all—was conveyed to Ipswich and exhibited by a "live yankee" to the visitors at the Cattle Show. It is said that his swineship looked remarkably well, considering that he has been dead about four years and has been in a standing posture ever since. He is ten feet long 'from tip to tip' and is evidently a whole hog—minus the pork. He bears a great deal of stuffing and possesses in a surprising degree that excellent quality of good pork—when it is killed in the right age of the moon—a tendency to swell in bulk. His case is a singular instance of the "ruling passion strong in death" as he grew so fast in his life time that from the mere force of habit he continues to grow after he is dead! His weight was enormous at the time of his death but it has been increasing ever since. It is correctly reported that this remarkable animal is several hundred pounds heavier now, than when he departed this life, and hopes are entertained that he will soon reach the weight of a large sized ox. We hope his gentlemanly proprietor will contrive some means of checking his growth as, if he continues to increase, his native town will scarcely be able to hold him. We do not wish to see him any larger than he is. His stuffed effigy now strikes the beholder with astonishment and admiration, and no true lover of pork can approach him without lifting his hat in respectful obeisance to this wonder of porkdom. 'May his shadow never be'—greater.

FIRES.

On Tuesday night last, our citizens were alarmed by a cry of fire, between 12 and 1 o'clock and a bright light was seen in the direction of Hooper's Mills. The fire was found to proceed from a dwelling house and barn, on the hill near Mr. Hooper's Iron Works, and had the wind been a different direction and no rain, that extensive establishment would have been saved with great difficulty. The whole force of the Fire Department was on the ground, but only about 4 Engines were used. Those nearest the fire were subjected to severe labor as they were obliged to pump the water nearly 50 feet perpendicular height through the hose, to reach the fire, which was subdued and part of the dwelling house saved in a ruinous condition. The house is called the Waters' house and is owned by Capt. Richardson and another. It is very ancient and of little value. We believe there is no satisfactory information of the cause of the fire but the Firewards have the subject under investigation.

We regret to state that Mr. Kimball, one of the Firewards, was injured by the falling of a chimney which carried with it a chamber floor under which he was at the time, and his preservation from a shocking death may be considered most remarkable.

There was a false alarm on Thursday forenoon, caused we believe, by the ringing of the bell of Rev Mr. Braman's meeting house, for a meeting.—It not only created quite a stir in our streets but reached to Salem and Beverly.

On Thursday evening the Fire Department were called out by an alarm in Salem, caused by the setting fire to a load of kindlings in the cellar of the City Hall which was speedily extinguished. A few minutes after, the chair-maker's shop of Mr. Tuttle in Washington street, was also discovered to be on fire in the inside but was soon extinguished by the engines.

MILITARY. The Danvers Light Infantry, under command of Capt. JACOBS, paraded in uniform complete, on Thursday afternoon last: their ranks were full and they made quite an attractive and soldierly appearance.

☞On Thursday last, a man, with a horse and wagon, drove rapidly up Foster street, lashing all the while the noble beast, until the animal becoming enraged, turned round very abruptly, by which means the fore wheels became disengaged and the man was thrown from the vehicle and slightly injured. We understand he was in a state of intoxication, and belonged to Lynn.

NUMBERING THE STREETS.

We have before remarked upon the importance of having numbers affixed to the houses and stores on the several streets, and every day convinces us more and more of the necessity and convenience of such a measure. The collector of taxes has employed every means to make public his place of residence, yet nothing is more common than to find persons, who have received his polite invitations, anxiously enquiring for his whereabouts.—We hope for the accomodation of these people, as well as all who have occasion to refer to any house or shop on any street, that the town, or individuals, will see that this desirable object is accomplished.

WINTER IS COMING. The cool nights and mornings of the past week naturally remind one of the necessity of providing for warmth and comfort during the approaching winter, and the first thing requisite to be obtained, is a good stove, and we would advise those in want to select one from the extensive assortment at the ware house of Messrs. LORD & WILEY, who, we are authorized to say, have "a few more left" of that beautiful pattern.

Mr. DEARBORN, at his old stand, in Boston St., has for sale an excellent assortment of Stoves.—This establishment however, is too extensively known in this vicinity to need any recommendation from us, and we simply refer our readers to his advertisement in another column.

MILITARY.

The 6th Regiment of Light Infantry, 4th Brig. 2d Div., comprising eight companies of Light Infantry and one of Riflemen, will be reviewed in Salem, on Thursday, Oct. 2d.

The Regiment comprises the following Companies.

A. Salem Light Infantry, Lieut. Peabody.
B. Salem Mechanic Lt. Infantry, Capt. Brown.
C. Marblehead Lt Infantry, Capt. Brown.
D. Marblehead Layfayette Guards, Capt. Carroll.
E. Beverly Lt. Infantry, Capt. Hildreth.
F. Danvers Lt. Infantry, Capt. Jacobs.
G. Manchester M. Lt. Infantry, Capt. Burnham.
H. Lynn Lt. Infantry, Lt. Wheeler.
I. Lynn Rifle Corps, Capt. Ingalls.

Philosophy af the Plan of Salvation. We have received from the Publishers, Messrs. J. P. Jewett & Co. of Salem, a copy of the fourth edition of this work, which we have had opportunity but for a hasty perusal, and will therefore here insert a communication from one who has thoroughly examined the work, and is well qualified to judge of its merits.

This is no superficial production, but the work of an original mind; a mind accustomed to grapple with first principles, and to examine into the nature and relations of things. The author has viewed the great scheme of man's redemption, from a position which no writer has occupied before him. He has developed, we believe, the exact "thought of God" as it was embodied in the Jewish ritual, and shown conclusively that Christianity is adapted both to the physical and spiritual nature of man. The followers of Kant and Cousin, with some others opposed to the sensuous system of Locke, may object, perhaps, to one position which the author has assumed; but with this exception, (and even here he has not been proved guilty of error) we think all will concur in pronouncing it a work of superior merit. It sheds a clear and consistent light upon what has appeared to some superficial minds, an insolvable enigma—the Levitical dispensation. No one can rise from a careful and candid perusal of this work, with the belief that the Old Testament is a mere tissue of unmeaning metaphors. On the contrary, he will find that, aside from its prophetic utterances, like the great globe on which we tread, it is interlaced with rich veins of ore, discoverable only by the sincere and thoughtful student. The eminently practical and common-sense views of the author commend themselves to every unprejudiced man's reason and conscience. In the prosecution of his work he has not permitted Fancy to preside in the hall of Judgment, nor suffered dark shapes to scowl along the colonnades of his argument.—Here are no "sinking to endless depths, nor mounting to inane limboes," none of the mists of Transcendentalism, nor fogs of German Neology, but simple truth standing out in bold and bright relief. The style is neat and perspicuous, unadorned with meretricious ornaments At the present day when so many light works of fiction are issuing from the press, we are glad to witness a demand for more solid aliment; it indicates a healthier pulse in the mind of the reading community. This work is no ephemeral production resembling—to use a simile of Macaulay's, those little angels, who, according to the pretty Rabinnical tradition, are generated every morning by the brook which rolls over the flowers of Paradise—whose life is a song—who warble till sunset, and then sink back into nothingness;—but it will live as long as there are minds in existence which can appreciate sound argument and true Philosophy.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—Your correspondent Truth says, "the issue between E. and myself has been upon the vested rights doctrine and upon the question whether the proposed new road would be profitable to the stockholders." In order to make an issue upon a question, there must be some difference in views in regard to such question: whether T. agrees with me in regard to the vested rights question or not, I cannot tell, as I am not allowed to know what he means by it. I have earnestly requested him to tell me, but not a word of explanation will he give. He seems to think it is some monster and by holding it up as such without any definite shape or form, he is enabled to make it a very convenient instrument to oppose anything that comes in his way—this makes it very difficult. I have informed T. that many others as well as myself had doubts whether the Malden branch could be made profitable, and have repeatedly asked him to give some evidence to show that it would, but all he has given is his own frank declaration that it will be profitable, and I suppose he thinks this ought to be "satisfactory to all candid minds." T. seems to think that we almost agree as to what is the duty of the General Court—the slight difference he discovers is this, that while I hold that it is the duty of the Court to consider well the effects of their measures upon the interests of the public, and that they always have done so or ought to have done it. He holds tha

NEW GAMES.

W. & S. B. IVES have just published.

"The Illustrated Scripture Cards," consisting of fifty beautiful colored Drawings, in a series of illustations from the birth of Adam down to the Captivity in Babylon. They are put up in neat gilt cases. It is by a Clegyman, and is highly instructive, both for the soicial and for the family circle and for the Sabbath School.

"The Game of Heroes, or Famous Deeds of Famous Men," by a Lady. This is also a delightful amusement, intellectual and instructive; it is in the form of Cards in a gilt embossed case. There are 86 Cards—half colored, the other half of poetical verses. The colored Cards are pictures of distinguished persons and events, and the printed Cards recount the virtues, vices and exploits of their corresponding Card among the pictures.

"The Illustrated, Instructive and Amusing Alphabet."—This is a finely lithographed colored sheet of the Letters of the Alphabet, with the Figures; each letter is accompanied with various objects, having their names beginning with the letter which accompanies each. It is most unique, and the best thing of the kind in the market. It is put in a Port Folio form, and in cases: each picture with their letters being seprate.

NEW STORE,

AND AN ENTIRE NEW STOCK OF

New and Cheap Goods.

GEORGE C. VARNEY & CO.,

HAVE great pleasure in informing their former patrons and the public generally, that having completed their NEW STORE, on the same site occupied by their old one, at

No. 13 Front Street, Salem.

they are now opening a full, complete, and well selected assortment of

WEST INDIA GOODS,
AND BEST
FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to dispose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a percentage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition to the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

WOOD, BARK, HAY, &c

☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurances to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerous patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were settled. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by thing that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them finds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills!! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yours respectfully,

J. E. F. MARSH.

Approved by the Governor, March 11, 1845,

Resolves concerning the convicts in the State Prison.

Resolved, That there be paid out of the treasury of the Commonwealth, to the Inspectors of the State Prison, the sum of one hundred dollars to be expended by them in purchasing books for the use of the convicts in said prison, and that a warrant be drawn accordingly.

Resolved, That the books hereby authorized to be purchased be distributed among the convicts in such manner, and under ruch regulations as the inspectors may from time to time direct, and that the warden be authorized and required to furnish the convicts with such lights as will enable them to read until nine o'clorck in the evening.

Appoved by the Governor, Morch 18, 1845,

An Act concering rewards for the prosecution and conviction of forgers and other offenders.

Be it enacted, &c.—

The rewards provided for in the nineteenth section of the one hundred and twenty-seventh chapter of the Revised Statutes, may, at the discretion of the Governor, with the advice of the Council, be paid after conviction, and before sentence of the offenders therein named.

Approved by the Governor, March 1845.

An Act authortzing judges of probate to appoint trustees in certain cases.

Be it enacted, &c.—

If in any will creating a trust or trusts, the testator shall have omitted to appoint a trustee to carry the same into effect, the judge of probate may after notice to all persons interested, appoint a trustee; and every trustee appointed by any judge of probate, by force of this act, shall have and exercise the same powers, rights and duties as if he had been originally appointed by the testator, and the trust estate shall vest in him in like manner as it would have vested, if appointed by the testator.

An Act to increase the number of justices of the court of Common Pleas.

Be it enacted, &c.—

Sec. 1. The number of justices of the Court of Common Pleas, shall be six instead of five, as now provided by law.

Sec. 2. This Act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Approved by the Governor, 1845.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

Salem, April 12, 1845.

NEW ENGLAND

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 264, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Benth, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfec ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand. As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.
May 31 JAMES FREDERICK FOSTER.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for peo pleo f all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetab les from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, thatof pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effectedby them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and su persede the use of all other purgative compounds; and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with ful directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamatiou of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depositopy 96 Commercial staeet, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeble temedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all condi itions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to directionf. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

POETRY.

THE BETROTHED OF ROBERT EMMETT.*

Oh! never call my heart thine own!
It must not, oh! it cannot be!
The look, the love, the spirit flown,
Are ever seen by me!
I cannot weep, as others weep,
O'er idle pleasures gone;
I cannot sleep as others sleep,
And dream of my fond home.

The tear may dwindle 'neath the smile,
The sigh may pass away;
The dark'ning wave may lift awhile
The lonely castaway!
But oh! what prayer can ever bid
The setting sun return?
What earthly kindness ever soothe
The griefs that inward burn?

The sea-bird from his lonely cliff,
Mute, melancholy, shy,
That looks o'er yon bright wave and skiff,
Is far more blessed than I!
He views the ocean sparkling round,
He sees the passer by;
But oh! its strife, its joyous sound,
Can never reach so high.

The turf that wraps his silent head,
The flow'rets o'er his grave,
They tell me oft how freedom bled
To bloom above the brave;
And oft his form descends to me
In the dead hour of night,
Unveiling immortality
With all its winged light.

Oh! then, forgive, forgive the word,
In gentle firmness spoken;
Oh love! but never strike the chord
If its sweet strain be broken;
Oh never strike! there is a tone
That mars thine earthly will!
The spirit of a loved one flown,
It hovers round me still!

*The circumstance of the betrothed of Robert Emmett, saying, that "her heart was buried with him," when solicited by another, is well known.

HEART'S EASE.

I used to love thee, simple flow'r,
To love thee dearly when a boy;
For thou did'st seem, in childhood's hour,
The smiling type of childhood's joy.

But now thou only mock'st my grief
By waking thoughts of pleasures fled;
Give me—give me the withered leaf,
That falls on Autumn's bosom—dead.

For that ne'er tells of what has been,
But warns me what I soon shall be;
It looks not back to pleasure's scene,
But points unto futurity.

I love thee not, thou simple flow'r,
For thou art gay and I am lone—
Thy beauty died with childhood's hour—
The heart's ease from my path is gone!

THE PLEDGE.

Come, let your cup flash sunshine-like
To friends now far away:
"Here's to the absent and the loved!"
The absent, did you say?

And wherefore should we drink to them?
It is a weary toast:
What boots it to recall the friends
Whom we have loved and lost?

Fast cuts our good ship through the sea—
What does it leave behind?
There is no path upon the wave,
No track upon the wind.

Like that swift ship we have passed on,
And left no deeper trace;
The circle parted from at home
Has now no vacant place.

Fewer and happier years than mine,
On thy young brow are set;
Soon thou wilt learn Time's easiest task
Is teaching to forget.

I'll fill as high, I'll drink as deep—
Or, must a toast be said?
Well, here are all I ever pledge—
"The present and the dead!"

COMMUNICATION.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—I have had before me for some time, the last communication of your correspondent E., but I never was more at a loss from what point to take my departure than I am at present. I have seen some thick weather, but I never run my jib-boom into quite so thick a fog, as I have since perusing his article. It will be remembered by all who read my last communication in reply to E., that my whole endeavor in that article was to establish the point that the Representatives from Danvers were instructed upon the Railroad question last winter. This fact E. had in a previous communication seen fit to disbelieve or deny, but I had supposed that after this gentleman had made so many bold insinuations and drawn so many inferences from facts, that he would have accommodated the public with a few of those facts when so good an opportunity was presented to him. I cannot perceive that he has in any manner shown to the public that the Representatives of the town did not receive such instructions, and must therefore conclude that my arguments are irrefragable. The only difference, then, between E. and myself is, that the Representatives of the town saw fit to make their actions conform to the interests and wishes of the town unanimously expressed, rather than to be operated upon by individual appliances, which was undoubtedly to some a bitter disappointment.

I shall not follow the gentleman in that low and invective strain which runs through his entire article, but shall if possible, dig from the thick envelope of perversion and misconstruction a few points which have been most adroitly and artfully hid from the public. The gentleman at the Plains says: "I believe that all I have done is to express the opinion that there must have been some extraordinary appliances to have induced the North Danvers Representative to do as he did, &c. Has not the gentleman said in reference to the instructions of the town, "If there have been any such instructions from the town, I have not been apprised of them, and hope they will be published"? and did he not say, that the Railroad Committee of the town gave the Representatives of the town instructions, but they paid no regard to them at all? I could not have believed that this gentleman would have had the effrontery to have denied this fact, and that too, when his own language on this point must be fresh in the remembrance of all who read it. I have paid but little regard to his insinuations about appliances, knowing that my course upon the Railroad question was sustained by all that myself or any one else was permitted to know was the unanimous wish of the town at that time.

The entire doings of the town upon this question of instructions have been published, as well as the action of the committee in relation to this point, but the gentleman at the Plains, has seen fit to pass them in silence, in hopes to divert the attention of the public from this, to a consideration of his dish of inferences and insinuations, which he seems so highly to appreciate. But will the gentleman stand somewhere? Does he yet deny that he was advised of any instructions of the town to their Representatives upon this question? I allow that this is the only point at issue between us, and will the gentleman at the Plains, give us a specimen of his magnanimity in discussing it? He also says in relation to the change of opinion which he or myself have had since the starting of this Railroad enterprise, that I have taunted him with having changed his opinion upon this question. I think he is exceedingly jealous and sensitive upon this point, or purposely blind to the most evident motive I had in bringing it forward, as no one can doubt its bearing in the argument where it belongs. The gentleman at the Plains, has denied any knowledge of any instructions given by the town to their Representatives. I supposed in arguing this point that if I could show that this gentleman wrote these instructions himself, and also that he was the strongest and most inveterate foe to the E. R. Road branch at that time, I should at least show to the public that this gentlemen knew more about these instructions and had more to do with them than he was now willing to admit, I do not now question that this gentleman has honestly changed his opinion in relation to this matter, and neither shall I permit him or any one else who like him brought into action their utmost influence and exertions in opposition to the E. R. R. branch, to accuse the Representatives of the Town of acting in any way upon this question save that way which was pointed out to them by the unanimous voice of their constituents, I think the gentlemen will not gain much sympathy from the public by a misconstruction of this sort.

In reference to the contradictory acts of the Committee the gentlemen says "was there any contradiction in the request to have the two propositions placed in the best possible form for the town to avail itself of either one, or both, or neither of them?" I do not hesitate to say there were no such requests made by this Committee, and that this question has no more to do with the action which this Committee had upon this subject than it has with the price of putty in New York. He then says "if the town did not consent to have the branch could they not call up Pingree's petition? And what if they could call it up; the chances are ten to one that if the town had rejected the E. R. Road bill as they unquestionably would have done, that the strong minority in favour of it assisted by the Capt. of the E. R. Road Company would have debarred them from obtaining a favourable report on their petition so long as that charter existed. The idea that the passage of the E. R. Road bill would not have prejudiced the claims of Mr. Pingree and his associates for a charter to build a branch R. Road to connect with the Main Extension Road, is a story which the gentlemen may tell the "marines" for their is no sailor on board this R. Road craft who knows, the Fore-top-bolin from the Main brace, that he can induce to believe it.

The gentleman all at once has a wonderful regard for the "dear public." He says "when any of our rulers does public acts prejudicial to our interests we ought to put them on their defence &c. How many interests does the term our contain, and how many can be conveniently accomodated under the appellation of me. And now Mr. Editor, I undertake to say, and I will even challenge this gentlemen to give the names of twenty only of the citizens of the town who had committed themselves in favour of the E. R. Road Branch previous to the twenty-fifth of last March, and yet your correspondent E. uses the terms our and we with as much liberty as he could if they honestly belonged to him in representing the interests of the whole town, when, if the gentlemen will give his magnanimity only better play he will perceive that the views of the citizens of the town must be considered when this subject was agitated before the Legislature, and before he and his coadjutors had six months time to prejudice the minds of the community in the least possible degree in favour of the E. R. Road branch.

The gentlemen at the Plains says, that during the discussion before the Committee, some expressed the strongest determination to have the bill killed, but he little thought that I should be the executioner. But did he not think so only one short month before this time? did he then doubt for a moment that my utmost exertions would be used to bring about the avowed wishes of the town? did he doubt when he put into my hands the executioner's axe and warranted its metal by puting his own name with the names of eight others upon its blade, that I should refrain frem trying the edge he had so nicely tempered simply because our wiley antagonist had to him assumed the garb of friendship, but had in no degree, conciliated the terms of friendship with his associates? If the gentleman at the Plains had supposed me capable of being made the dupe of such treacherous acts, he is mistaken in his man.

My disputant concludes his article by asking how long since the gentleman found his instructions? In reply I would say that they were received on the twenty-eighth of last January, the next day after they were passed by the unanimous consent of the town with his assistance, and having received his signature together with eight others, they were sent in an envelope directed to my colleague and myself at the State House, Boston.

The gentleman states that there were some minor points in my communication he should have been glad to have noticed. I should have been glad if he had noticed some of the major points in it, and have no doubt the public would have been glad also. But as it is I think the least you can do Mr. Editor is to allow this gentlemen a further opportunity to notice these points, (and perhaps some facts may be found by him which he has inadvertently passed over) as he has expressed a gladness to do so.

SELECTED TALES.

LIFE AT THE SOUTH.

A LYNCHER'S OWN STORY;

BY T. M. FIELD.

"I never fight when angry, gentleman"—Jas. Bowie.

"I go in for reprisals, gentlemen—by the eternal heavens, reprisals! Seize on Abolition property in New Orleans, Natchez—wherever found.—Seize on the Yankee scoundrels themselves and exchange them for your own kidnapped slaves—nigger for nigger, by thunder!"

This violent speech, delivered, with savage energy, by a thin, wirey-looking man—one of a group collected around the stove in the "social hall" of a Mississippi steamboat—was received with a shout of applause by all assembled.

"Good, by gracious!" "That's the talk!"—"Your'e a hoss, Judge!" &c., followed the explosion, like a rattle of small thunder, till an enormous figure, in a white hat and blanket coat—yet, withal, a good-looking man—arose slowly, stretched himself, and brushed back the thick hair from his broad forehead, and then, in quiet, yet evidently pleased accents, said, with a smile:

"Yes, Judge, that's the talk, I believe! Gentlemen, we'll take a little something."

There was a general demonstration as if to rise, when the barkeeper, who made one of the crowd, and who appeared to be singularly ingrossed with the new doctrine of "reprisals," begged the "Col." would keep his seat, and the "drinks" should be brought.

"Sit down, Colonel," cried the energetic Judge, emptying his mouth of a "chew," by way of preparation for "one more drink," and at the same time running his heels higher up the stove pipe—"Sit down; this thing has got to be fixed between the North and the South, and a little talk about it won't be lost."

All resumed their seats, the "drinks" were brought, and, by the spirit with which fresh cigars were lighted, it was evident that the subject had only got fairly under headway in the assembly.—It was in the fall of 18—. During the preceding summer, a couple of slaves had been seduced, and finally wrested from their masters by the Boston Abolitionists, and the numerous Southerners then at the North, filled with violent indignation, gave vent to the most furious threats and denunciations. It is not intended here to argue, or even comment upon the vexatious questions of slavery, but simply, to sketch a few features and incidents of Southwestern character and adventure.

It was a cold and rainy night, the steamer plunged along amidst dense shadows, in which the unpracticed eye could not even distinguish an outline; the main cabin was spread with ma[t]tresses, and the persons around the stove, the la[t]e up, deserting some half hour previously a coup[l]e of card tables, and falling upon an exciting top[ic] now promised to make a night of it.

"Yes, gentleman," resumed the fiery Judge, "[t]his may seen like a desperate doctrine, but what e[l]se kept desperation is left us? The crisis must com[e] My slave is my property guaranteed to me by t[he] constitution. If Massachusetts sanctions the sei[z]ure of our niggers, who shall cry shame on Loui[s]iana, should she retort upon their ships?"

Another cheer of approval further stimulated t[he] speaker, who rushed into a vehement relation [of] several other Abolition outrages, which led to c[er]tain stories of Southern vengeance upon Aboliti[on] agents; a sort of vindictive frenzy spread amo[ng] the company; fresh drinks were called in; Lync[h]ing was a theme upon which all were eloquen[t] and well known cases of punishment under th[e] summary code were repeated, commented a[nd] gloated on with a savage enjoyment which pro[m]ised a rough fate for the next tract distribu[ted] which might be caught by any of the party.

During this time the Colonel, though eviden[tly] of kindred sentiments with the company, had p[re]served his equanimity; he smoked his cigar del[i]erately, listened to the indifferent speakers with [a] assenting smile, or, may be, a "Just so, Docto[r]" or a "Quite correct, gentleman;" but, finally, [af]ter the relation of a retaliating capture and e[x]cution under horribly exciting circumstances, [and] in mild tones, and with an aspect that indica[ted] any thing but ferocity, signified his intention [to] relate "a little circumstance" himself.

"I'm not a passionate man, gentlemen," said [he] drawing up his legs slowly, and adjusting his v[ast] bulk in the chair; "I'm rather a calm man, a[nd] apt to bear putting upon, rather, but I go in [for] Lynch-law, some, for all that. I had a little c[ase] of my own with one of those Abolition gentlem[en] once, and I acted up to the law fully—on [my] honor I did, gentlemen. I am a family m[an], gentlemen—and a friend who comes to see m[e] or a stranger wishing to put up, if an honest lo[o]king white man, always finds my house his ho[me] while in it, I keep servants to wait on the[m] purposely, I do, gentlemen, and treachery un[der] such circumstanees is a mean thing—it's not [a] white man's act, gentlemen."

An emphatic assent was expressed on all han[ds] "Well, I lost two boys, valuable servants, gent[le]men, by entertaining wolves in sheeps' clothi[ng] and I determined that the next one who cal[led] should be punished some, and I didn't wait lo[ng] for, somehow, they had got the hang of my hou[se] gentlemen, and took the advantage of my temp[er]. A very polite stranger, with his wife and a 'de[ar] born,' came along; he had something, howe[ver] the matter with his eyes when I looked at hi[m] and so I put my own servant, Jake—a very g[ood] boy, gentlemen—a perfect WHITE MAN, and wh[o] I never said a cross word to in my life—I put J[ake] to tend on them; and sure enough, after I was [in] bed, back came the boy to say that the gentlem[an] had offered to run off! Well, I told Jake to [go] with him—first leaving word which way he [was] to travel, and then I went to sleep. In the mo[rn]ing, Jake's wife—a decent wench, gentlemen [and a] perfect lady—came to tell me all about the arran[ge]ment; so taking my overseer with me, I sta[rted] after them."

"I should THINK so!" "Wake snakes!" "[Go] ahead, Judge!" A dozen eager exclamations ev[in]ced the zest with which the climax of the st[ory] was expected. The narrator, proceeded wit[h] sang froid that was inimitable.

"I hadn't gone but a few miles, when b[efore] comes Jake, meeting me. The fox, gentlem[en] had smelt a trap and PUT, with his wife and [all] gon, leaving the boy to take care of himself. [Of] course I didn't drop the matter, but followed [on] and soon got on trail. I tracked him back a g[reat] many miles from the river, but missed him nea[r] lake which was back of our plantation, and lo[st a] good deal of time. Towards afternoon, return[ing] by another road towards the river, between [the] bayou and Dr. Boll's new clearing, I heard voi[ces] and in a minute drove right up to a crowd of nei[gh]bors, who had got my visitor, his wife, and [the] 'dear-born' right in the middle of them! The f[un] is, gentlemen, one or two of them had got no[tion] that there were wolves about, and were on [the] look-out for varmint as my acquantances drove [in] among them."

"Ha! ha! ha!" A general chuckle of deli[ght] was succeeded by a grin of anticipation.

"I found my friend, gentlemen, talking ri[ght] and left, like a lawyer, making every thing strai[ght] and agreeable, when suddenly he caught sight [of] me, in the next moment of Jake; and, gentlem[en] if ever man gave up the ghost before the brea[th] was out of him, it was that fellow; his eyes gl[are]d, a dark circle settled round them, while [his] lower lip, blue and quivering as the blood left [it] after making an effort, as it were, to recall the [un]laxed jaw to its duty, finally fell with it; and th[en] the man sat, staring at me, motionless, with [the] exception of his tongue, which worked spasmo[di]cally in the effort to supply itself with moist[ure] from the parched mouth. Gentlemen, he was [a] picture of a small rascal caught in a full snap. [At] I first blushed that he was a white man, and th[en] next that he was an American."

"American h—ll!" interrupted one of the pil[ots] of the boat, who, perched upon a pile of trun[ks] had hitherto said nothing. "he was a d—d Yank[ee] that's what he was!" This distinction was rec[ei]ved with great applause, of course. The Colo[nel] resumed:

"There was just about a tolerable court on t[his] spot, gentlemen, and it was agreed to try the f[ell]ow right thar. There was evidence besides mi[ne] for one man had followed him up along the pla[n]tations for twenty miles; but yet the woman kin[d]er stood between him and his due, and I though[t] would question her too. She was young, gent[le]men, with a simple look—had evidently neith[er] the heart nor the wit of a woman about her, a[nd] at my first question—something put it into m[y] head—'Are you married to this man?' she bur[st] into tears, and sobbed as if her heart would brea[k] I had him taken away at once, and out it all ca[me]

--with no thought of injuring her companion though: it was the simple impulse to relieve a timid mind by confession. She was not his wife. She had taught school in Tennessee, where this man saw her, and first persuading her to aid him in the circulation of abolition tracts, finally seduced and carried her to New Orleans, where, growing more bold as he extended his acquaintance with the country he had made another arrangement with the 'Society,'—one of greater profit as of greater risk—namely, to 'run off' negroes from the plantations along the coast. Gentlemen this is a mighty long story—bar-keeper——"

"Oh, go on!" "Go ahead, Colonel." Drinks at the moment were declined, but the shorter operation of taking a fresh "chaw" by way of filling up the pause.

"I had another question to ask the woman.—"Do you love this man?" said I. The poor creature wept worse than ever, gentlemen; she said her only desire was to go to some friends in Illinois, where she hoped to be welcome and to get along more wisely. "He abuses you, then," said I. 'Oh,' said she, 'I wouldn't mind that, if I thought he wouldn't kill me.' In short, as I hope to live a mild and considerate citizen, gentlemen, that livid cowardly scoundrel had, during my pursuit of him after threatening his victim—now his burthen—till she was nearly lifeless, actually attempted to drown her in the swamp! I needn't tell you, gentlemen, how unanimous the verdict was in this case; the woman, for whom we subsequently made up a subscription, was moved off towards the nearest house; the man, a mighty small figure, anyhow, shrunk to half his natural size; discolored as if the last corrupting change had anticipated the grave; his arms bound behind his back—and shivering on the ground too silent to exhibit a spasm—with the rein which he had lately held in his hand buckled around his neck for a halter—like a thing too abject even to hang—awaited the selection of a crotch for him to swing from."

It may be supposed that the picture, the horrid features of which were thus in detail described, had gradually excited the phlegmatic limner—not at all! His sentences swelled, not from the mere impetuous gathering of ideas, but, as it seemed, from a good-natured desire of making the story as interesting as possible to his hearers; while it in no respect exhibited nervlessness, there was not a flash of passion during the whole narration This was not the case with the hearers, though. The eye of the "Judge" seemed bursting from his head in eager expectation, while the "chewing" operation on his part was for a moment suspended—others were like him—a few again, by an eager but painful contraction of the brows, betrayed a softer nature—at any rate, more sensitive nerves.

"Yes, gentlemen, there was a moment's delay in choosing a limb; in the meantime, by way of hanging the culprit with a little life in him, some one had given him a mouthful of whiskey, when, recovering his tongue, he began to beg; from begging, gentlemen, he got to screaming; blood actually trickled from his straining eyes, and it was getting unpleasant—no dignity about it! an idea struck me! I just climbed up, hand over hand, a pretty stout sapling close by me. I'm a heavy man, gentlemen, and as I mounted over, the young tree came with me—bent like a fishing rod—"

There was a breathless silence in the company; an enormous "roach" peeping from a crack in the paneling, could hardly have crossed without being heard, while each eye was rivited horribly upon the speakers.

"The culprit, gentlemen, took the idea sooner than any of the others, and his shrieks and ravings were dreadful—really dreadful! Another climbed after me, and, with the added weight, down we both came half hid amongst the light boughs of the top, and the loose end of the rein was made fast in a second. 'One instant, for God's sake! I've got children! For the sake of my soul!'—half uttered scream, gentlemen, mingled with the rush of the boughs, as we dropped to the ground, and the nigger thief, with a jerk that snapped his neck, flew into the air, describing the half circle as spanned by his halter, and swinging back to us again from the other side!"

A long breath was drawn by the whole company. The "Judge" was the first to break the succeeding pause.

"Well, that was an idea! We'll drink on that, gentlemen, by thunder!"

All moved to the bar—some two or three silently, the others as to the mere change of enjoyment.—"Colonel," cried the Judge, "name your liquor—that was an idea!"

"Yes!" exclaimed another, with no less enthusiasm, "a first-rate idea!"

"A splendid idea!" "A glorious idea!" was the general chorus.

"Yes, gentlemen," complacently observed the giant, as he raised his glass, "I think myself that it was a sweet idea!"

BUST OF HENRY CLAY.—J. T. Hart, of Lexington, Ky., is now on his way North, with a Plaster of Paris Bust, executed by himself of Henry Clay, taken from life, about three months ago at Ashland. It is certainly a most complete specimen of art. The likeness is pronounced by all who have seen the distinguished Statesman, as a superior production.

☞The Mormon excitement, in Illinois, continues to rage with unabated vigor. The whole number of houses burnt, at last accounts is said to be fifty or sixty. Several persons have also been killed, and three or four wounded. There was a rumor prevalent at Quincy that three hundred Mormons, with some pieces of artillery, had marched towards Carthage. The citizens were gathering in bodies to oppose them, and a regular pitched battle was anticipated. It was thought that the Governor would not call out the troops, nor take measures to allay the excitement, but leave the beligerents to fight it out until they are satisfied.

Bishop Soule, of the methodist episcopal church, says there has been a decease of 45,445 members in the northern section of the church the past year, and an increase of 9,703 in the southern section, while the total increase for the preceding year was 155,000. He ascribes it to the contentions that have agitated the church.

Preaching for His Own Body.—A Massachusetts clergyman writes us that, last Sunday a slave who is a minister of the gospel, and "has charge of the flock of Christ in St. Louis, was in his pulpit begging money to bury his own body "He is bright, shrewd, and very respecteble as a preacher."—Bangor Gazette.

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 4, 1845.

WHIG NOMINATIONS.

FOR GOVERNOR

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

JOHN REED.

☞We publish to day the nomination of the Whig State Convention, George N. Briggs and John Reed—names full of virtue and honor—men of whom any party or people might be proud. We call upon the citizens of Massachusetts—from the green hills of Berkshire, the home of one, to the sandy shores of Cape Cod, the birth-place of the other—to rally around these true representatives of your republican principles and character, and place them again in those seats of power which they have already ennobled by their services and fame. They are faithful, living exponents of the good old Whig Cause. They are men of experience, and wisdom, and honesty. They are friends of law, and order, and religion. They are true sons of the Pilgrim Fathers, and will govern the State upon the principles of its venerated founders. Give them your cordial support, all ye who cherish the welfare of our Commonwealth, who would preserve its good name, and perpetuate its blessings for yourselves and your children.

GOV. BRIGGS.

At the late Festival of the Salem Mehanic Association, it was our privilege to listen to the eloquent address of Gov. Briggs, and much as we had previously admired his public and private character, we must acknowledge that our estimate of the excellent qualities of his head and heart, has been raised many degrees by this first opportunity of seeing and hearing the man. There is a plain spoken frankness, an open hearted honesty in that plain exterior and in the very tones of his voice that dispel all doubts of his sincerity. There is that appearance of integrity and absence of all guile or approach to deception in his language and manner, which strikes the hearer with the assurance of an honest man. We say this from no partizan feeling and shall rejoice to acknowledge the same good qualities in a political opponent who may exhibit the same indubitable proofs of sterling integrity. It is a quality we admire and which is admired by the honest and enlightened every where. All admit its transcendant power over personal and political prejudice, and this, after all, may be the true secret of Gov. Briggs' great personal popularity and the unwillingness of his political enemies to say aught against him. On the occasion now referred to, nobody, whether friend or foe, could listen to his plain and forcible remarks on the importance and respectability of Labor, and his allusion to his own early experience as a mechanic, without feeling that his sympathies are strongly alive to the interests of the laboring classes. There was a simplicity and truthfulness in his manner that carried conviction to every heart. His interest in behalf of those who labor, is derived from the recollection of the time when he himself labored at a mechanical trade, and it is manifestted, not in that patronising, condescending manner sometimes used by professionai men and others toward mechanics, but in espousing their cause with a hearty good will, and in the full assurance of their claim to a rank no way inferior to any other class.—Gov. Briggs would no more think of admitting for a moment, that a man who works with his hands as well as with his head, is inferior on that account to one who works with his head alone, than he would think of claiming superiority for the former. He regards all classes and interests as so interwoven, that no one can say to another "I have no need of thee."—He would do his duty as a citizen by swinging the axe or serving at the brakes of a fire engine with the same alacrity and from the same feeling of obligation to promote the general good, as he would perform his functions in the Council Chamber of the Commonwealth.

There is also in the character of Gov. Briggs a noble vein of benevolence, which cannot escape the notice of the most casual observer—a large hearted philanthropy which, from the very love of doing good flows spontaneously forth in behalf of the poor, the down trodden and the oppressed every where. If to all these traits we add the well known fact that in all his acts he is guided by deep religious principle, we may well say, happy is the community possessing such a man and the commonwealth governed by such a magistrate.

The County Convention, for the selection of candidates for Senators, will assemble at the Court House in Ipswich, on Thursday next, at 11 o'clock, A. M.—The delegates from this town are Henry Fowler, Henry Poor, Wm. D. Northend, Ellias Needham.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES IN DANVERS.

Twenty-five years ago there were only three Churches in this town. Now there are ten, the increase in that period being seven, while for more than a century previous, only one, (the First Baptist) was added to the number then existing. It has been remarked as a singular circumstance that of all the clergymen who have been settled over these churches and who have either died or been dismissed, not a single direct descendant or member of their families are now residents in the town.

MEXICAN WAR.—By the last advices from Mexico, the indications are favorable, that a settlement of the existing difficulties between that nation and the United States will be effected without war.

MECHANIC LEVEE IN SALEM.

The S. C. M. Association held a 'Social Gathering' last Wednesday evening at their Hall, which was numerously attended, and the whole affair was exceedingly well arranged and all the details carried out in a manner to reflect the greatest credit on the Association and its Officers.

Early in the evening the company began to assemble in the large Hall which was on this occasion tastefully decorated with banners, festoons of evergreen, triumphal arches, inscriptions, and portraits of Washington, Lafayette, and the three venerable past Presidents of the Association, Howard, Frothingham and Russell. The whole effect of this adornment, the Hall being extra lighted, was not only pleasing but dazzling to the eye, and seemed the mechanism of fairy hands.

After the company had assembled, His Excellency Gov. Briggs came in, attended by Hon. Stephen C. Phillips and Adjt. General Oliver, who took their places on the platform and were welcomed in a neat congratulatory speech from Mr. Currier, the President of the Association. Mr. C. was followed by Col. John Russell, the third President of the Institution and one of its founders, in an excellent speech which afforded text for the speakers who came after him. Gov. Briggs next came forward and was received with great applause. His speech like those which preceded him, was brief, but eloquent and appropriate and elicited much approbation. In obedience to a regulation of the Committee, announced by the President in his introductory address, that no speaker was expected to occupy more than ten minutes, the Gov intimated that he must come to a close, as he wished to conform to the "rules of the shop" as he always did when he was a journeyman hatter. He was however foiled in this design by the company present who called upon him loudly to "go on" which he did in a manner to elicit the most rapturous applause. Hon. Stephen C. Phillips was next introduced as the "friend of schools," and addressed the company with even more than his usual tact and eloquence. Geo. Darracott, Esq., late President of the Boston Association also delivered a short and pithy speech, and this part of the entertainment closed by a pathetic address from Gen. Oliver, which drew tears from the eyes of his former pupils who were present, when he reminded them how he used to "encourage their hands" when he led or drove them in the paths of knowledge.

The remainder of the evening was spent by the company in social conversation, listening to the fine music of the Band, promenading, marching, partaking of the refreshment which was bountifully furnished, and later in the evening after the elders had retired, the younger portion of the campany participated in the "mazy dance" until the smaller hours of the morning.

In the above hasty sketch, we have given but a meager description of this Festival of the S. C. M. A. as its enjoyments must have been participated in to be appreciated, and those who were present will long remember it as one of the sunny spots of their past recollections. The company was very large and truly respectable in character and deportment, alike removed from the settlings and dregs of society as from its scum and froth,—presenting to an observer a highly favorable view of the really useful portion of the community of both sexes in the pursuit and attainment of rational enjoyment. We congratulate the Association on the pleasurable result of their first "Social Gathering," and think its success will encourage a repetition.

Iron Foundry in Salem.—We learn from the Salem Gazette, that a firm of experienced founders from Nashua, have purchased a lot of land near the Cotton Factory, and have commenced operations for the establishment of an Iron Foundry in that place.

Mr. George Savary, of Bradford, has been nominated by the loco foco State Central Committee as candidate for Lieutenant Governor, and has accepted the nomination.

The venerable Judge Tucker, of New Jersey died at his residence on Friday, Sept. 19th.

NAVY YARD IN DANVERS.

We believe it is not generally known by our citizens that in the Revolutionary War, four ships of war of 20 guns each were built in Danvers for the general government. They were built and launched at Kent's ship yard at the Neck. Will some one of our aged friends in that part of the town give us some accounts of these vessels as their names and history would be of interest, connected as they are with the active part taken by Danvers in that great struggle for civil liberty.

Fatal Accident at East Boston Ferry. A young man named Moore, was drowned at the Ferry way to East Boston, on Sunday last. The boat had just left the wharf, when he came down the inclined plane with such force that he was unable to stop himself. His body was recovered about an hour after.

American Tea. A successful attempt has been made in Virginia to cultivate the Chinese Tea Plant. So says the Southern Planter. We hope those who drink it will imbibe no abstraction principles.

ROTATION.

Mr. Sylvanus Dodge has been appointed Post Master at South Danvers, in place of Dr. Joseph Osgood.

W. Low, of Boxford, has been removed from the Boxford Post Office.

☞The population of New York city, by the late census, is 366,785, an increase of 54,075 in five years.

Suicide. Hon. John White, late speaker of the U. S. House of Representatives, committed suicide by blowing his brains out with a pistol, at his residence in Richmond, on the 22nd ult. Pecuniary embarrassment was supposed to be the cause.

The annexed letter was shown to us, by one of the prudential school committee of this town, as having been addressed to him by a person to whom he had spoken to take charge of a school, and who explains the reason why he cannot take it. As the person seems to feel aggrieved at the treatment he received from the committee, it is but just that he should have an opportunity to explain for himself. It is impossible fully to appreciate the peculiarities of this letter, from an examination of it in print; but we think it carries upon the face of it, evidence of the correctness of the decision to which the committee came, in relation to the gentleman's qualifications as a teacher. Committees cannot be too careful in the discharge of their responsible duties.

Dear Sir—Being very late when I saw the Committee, I could not call on you, but presume that you have been informed of the result; and the chicanery and deception played off upon me; and theat the thing was all managed by one or two of the Committee who had a friend out of employ, who they had previously determined should have the school. But the first step was to get rid of me. Mark this, they found no fault with some things at our first interview, but commended them, on my examination in them, afterwards they presumed to censure, where they just before had approved, further they required examination in studies that the Law does not allow in Schools like yours.

Some of that Committee, I presume, know what Cards are, and how to suit their knowledge of them to the blackest purposes. I never saw more wickedness expressed on the countenance of human being, than on the face of two of that Committee;—perhaps three. Men destitute of the best principles of our nature have turned me —— of doors.

Respectfully yr in haste

MR. GOUGH

Has made a public disclosure and confession of thecircumst ances connected with his late mysterious conduct, which corroborates the statement which has previously been published of his being drugged in a glass of soda which he drank with a person, who accosted him very familiarly in the street, pretending to be an old shop-mate. Mr. G. thinks he deceived him in this particular also, as he has no recollection of ever having seen him before. He gave his name as Jonathan Williams. Soon after drinking the soda, Mr. Gough says he felt a strange sensation about the lungs, and stepped into a grocery store and called for some brandy, which he drank, and soon became delirious. While in this state he was conducted by a woman, whom he did not know, to her place of residence at which place he was found in a very weak and dangerous situation. Mr. Gough says he did not call for liquor during the whole of his illness, and does not remember that he felt any desire or craving for it. The above is the substance of his confession, and it is told by him in a plain and simple manner and bears the evidence of truth and penitence.

RESERVOIR. There has been a Reservoir sunk near the Monument on Washington Street recently, which is calculated to contain about 150 hogsheads of water. This will afford much protection to that populous neighborhood in the event of fire. It is built of brick, laid in hydraulic cements and is to be supplied with water from the Acqueduct,

FOR THE COURIER.

WEST NEWBURY NURSERIES.

Mr. Editor—During the past week I took a ride through a portion of the town of West Newbury. In it is some of the finest land in the State, and much of it is under a high degree of cultivation — It is truly a town of farms. As you enter it from Newburyport, the renowned Indian Hill farm occupied by B. Poore, attracts your attention. It is a beautiful spot, and in the summer season attracts many visitors. Next to this are the nurseries of the Ordoway's, from which a large number of young trees are sold annually. Passing by these we came to the farm or nursery rather, of Silas Titcomb, Esq., and were invited by the polite proprietor to walk through the grounds. We spent over an hour examining his different varieties of young trees. We were shown one nursery, of one quarter of an acre, on which Mr. T. assured us there were upwards of forty-two hundred young apple trees. They were all of the best varieties, from one to three years in the bud. They were under the best of cultivation, and all straight and remarkably vigorous. Some of the young trees which were budded near to the ground last fall have during the past summer grown to the astonishing height of 6 and 7 feet. I never saw a more luxuriant growth. Beside these he had all varieties of the Plum, Pear, and Peach, of very excellent appearance. It was a rich sight, and to those who wish to purchase young trees, it affords a rare chance. There are few places in the State where more attention is paid to nurseries of trees, than in West Newbury, and we are informed that all who have engaged in it, have made it profitable.

The "True American." The lexington (Ky.) Inquirer of Friday last, says: "We learn that at the time of putting our paper to press, ten of the committee, appointed by the meeting in this city on the 18th, to remove the office of the True American, were on trial before the city court.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

In Mr. Mann's Eighth Report, the expediency of the division of towns into School Districts is discussed in an able manner, and the result is, that those towns where there is no such division, other things being equal, have the best schools and with less burden on the inhabitants. The evil of thus dividing towns into districts, especially if small, is seen in the great struggle in these districts whenever a new school house is to be built. The expense is always very burdensome to the inhabitants in addition to their usual town taxes; while if no such districts existed, the occasional erection of a school house would scarcely be felt when done by the whole town. The management of the schools can also be much better when placed more directly under the charge of the town committee. If the school districts cannot be abolished altogether, the next best mode suggested by the Secretary, is to unite two or more districts into one. We quote below from the Report an extract relating to the advantages of town schools in preference to district schools.

In cases where the schools are maintained by the town, in its corporate capacity, it is obvious that every section of the town would be treated substantially alike. No portion of the inhabitants would contribute, for any length of time, to pay for benefits from whose participation they were debarred. If only one good schoolhouse were erected within any part of the town's jurisdiction, all other parts would demand as good a house for themselves. Having contributed to the erection of a good house for the favored section, an equitable claim for one substantially as good, would vest in every other section. This would partake of the nature of a claim for remuneration or reimbursement; and it would be so obviously founded in justice, that no man regardful of his own interests could omit to make it, and no respectable man on whom it was made, could resist it. In such a case, therefore, not only all parental and patriotic motives, but even interested ones, would array themselves on the side of advancement. Under the present system, the erection of a new schoolhouse awaits the imperious call of necessity, or the slow action of duty in the public mind; and perhaps no call of necessity has ever been so loud and imperative as not to encounter opposition from more or less of the taxable inhabitants.

The same principles would come into full activity, in regard to the length of schools, and the competency of teachers. All would insist upon reform and become advocates for progress. Were the whole town responsible in its corporate capacity, for the whole of the schools within it, the inhabitants of no town would ever think of, the inhabitants of any town would never submit to, a school of only three or four months in a year, for one part, while other parts were enjoying a school for ten months, or for the whole year. No section would ever accept a teacher, hired for $10 a month, and perhaps dear at that, while others were favored with teachers richly worth $30 or $40 a month. Each section too, would demand an equal supervision from the school committee, and would make favoritism or predilection as dangerous as they are unjust. So of school furniture, apparatus, libraries, and of other constituents in the prosperity of a school. In fine, if towns, as such, were to administer the school system within their respective limits, the great principle of republican equality would have an unobstructed sphere of action, and would yield its harvest of beneficent fruits; now, selfishness has ever-renewing opportunities for interposing its mischievous obstructions to the progress of our schools. But the calamity of this system is entailed upon the State. A few towns, it is true, have abolished their district organization, and reverted to the ancient system. But we can hardly believe the example willbe generally followed, at least for a long time to come.

HON. EDWARD EVERETT has declined the public honors which were tendered him.

DIVIDENDS.

The following are the dividends payable at the Banks on Monday next:—

Danvers Bank, 3 per cent.
Warren Bank, 3 per cent.

Growth of a Manufacturing Town. A single School District in the town of Manchester, N. H., which eight years ago contained but one hundred and twenty-five inhabitants, all told, now has within its limits a busy population of nearly ten thousand. The whole amount of cash disbursed by manufacturing establishments is not far from seventy-five thousand dollars per month—sixty-four thousand dollars of which are paid to the operatives alone! Who can point us to an instance on record of similar thrift, rapid increase and substantial prosperity?

Marine Electric Telegraph. The Boston Times states that Messrs. Hudson & Smith, the proprietors of the Marine Telegraph, have made arrangements to establish a magnetic telegraph from Nantasket to Boston—by which arrangement marine intelligence of all kinds can be communicated in all wrathers to the station in the city. This is the first enterprise of the kind in New England.

A Great Place for Babies. According to the censens of 1840, there were in Missouri, at that time, the astonishing number of sixty-seven thousand, one hundred and ninety seven babies, or young specimens of humanity under the age of five years! If they have continued to come in an increasing ratio, we wonder how many the next census will record.

Further of the Mormon War.—An extra from the Illinois State Kegister says that the adverse parties met near Carthage, and that a fight ensued in which eighteen Anti-Mormons were killed. A large number of Anti-Mormons were taken prisoners. The Governor has issued a proclamation, calling out the militia, to quell the disturbance.

In Pittsfield, Capt CHARLES H. BIGELOW, of the U. S. Engineers, to Miss HARRIETT C., daughter of His Excellency Governor Briggs.

DEATHS.

In Danvers, on Thursday morning, SYLVESTER OSBORN, Esq., aged 87 years. The funeral will be from his late residence on Washington street, this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Relatives and friends are invited to attend.

Another of the worthies of Revolutionary memory is thus numbered with the dead. At the early age of 16, Major Osborn was found in the front ranks of the defenders of his country's rights; and on the 19th of April, 1775, accompanied his friend, Capt. Foster, to the battle field at Lexington. He was the youngest of the hundred men that went from Danvers on that day—all of whom, excepting the venerable GIDEON FOSTER at the age of 96, and Levi Preston at the age of 89, are now gone. Through life Major Osborn has been distinguished for energy and uprightness of character. Few men have been more universally beloved and respected. For many years he was one of the most active and influential citizens in the town in which he was born and always resided. For the last twenty years he has carefully avoided mingling with the crowd and bustle of society, preferring the comforts of his own home, and imparting joy by his presence to all around him.—Gaz.

In Salem, Mr ORRIN D. WELLS, formerly of Watertown, N. Y., aged 35. CHARLES SAMUEL, son of Charles L. and Hannah P. Bradbury, aged 4 years.

REBECCA PROCTOR, daughter of George W. and Abigail K. Reed, aged 15 months.

In Topsfield, 20th inst, Mr JOHN BATCHELDER aged 77.

In Philadelphia, SOPHRONIA ADELINE, wife of H. Hastings Weld, aged 34.

In Woburn, 25th ult, Mrs MARY, wife of Rev Silas B. Randall, and daughter of Rev Mr Tucker, of New York, aged 22.

LORRAINE'S PILLS.
All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by thing that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them finds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yonrs respectfully,

J. E. F. MARSH.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 1843

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills, we have sold all we had last. They have given very good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,

E. MASON.

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 1844

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtue, of Lorraine's Pills, I had no faith whatever, but I took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirely left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,

W. M. HALSTAL

Sir. I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent—all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

A severe pain, in both sides cured!!

LOWELL, Mass., April 20th 1944.

Sir,—For the last few months I have been afflicted with a severe pain in both sides, at times so hard that I could scarcely get my breath. * * * * It is a pleasure to feel well,—but a much greater one to say that I was cured immediately upon taking one dose of Dr. LORRAINE'S PILLS. J. BROOKS.

A hacking cough constantly annoyed me!

BOSTON, Mass., June 1st; 1844

Sir,—In February last, I took a sudden cold, after which a hacking cough constantly annoyed me, and this, combined with my other maladies, rendered me truly miserable, as everybody told me that I was in a consumption. Since, I have taken LORRAINE'S PILLS and now every body tells me that I am well;—I fee as well as ever I did. J. E. S. McKEY.

In removing from the old stand he confidently hopes to receive the continued patronage of those who have formerly received his publications and he pledges himself that he will use his best exertions to procure all New Works promptly and sell them at the lowest prices.

His long experience and extensive acquaintance with those publishers and others engaged largely in the Book Trade will enable him to answer orders for particular Works, with great promptness, and at the most favorable prices.

REFRESHMENTS,

such as are usually kept at Restaurateurs, and SODA AND MEAD, will be furnished at the new stand, by S. SAUNDERS.

NEW ENGLAND
TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfec ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand. As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

May 31 JAMES FREDERICK FOSTER.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for people of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, thatof pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels and general feverish habit. The child falls into quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with full directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs Whooping Cough, Inflamation of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depository 96 Commercial street, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeable remedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all eases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extsnsively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to direction. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

POETRY.

AN INSCRIPTION.

DO NOT PLUCK THE FLOWERS—THEY ARE SACRED TO THE DEAD.

Oh, spare the flowers, the fair young flowers,
The free glad gift the summer brings;
Bright children of the sun and showers,
Here do they rise, earth's offerings.
Rich be the dew upon you shed,
Green be the bough that o'er you waves,
Weariless watchers by the dead,
Unblenching dwellers 'midst the graves!

Oh, spare the flowers!—their sweet perfume,
Upon the wandering zephyr cast,
And lingering o'er the lowly tomb,
Is like the memory of the past.
They flourish freely, though beneath
Lie the dark dust and creeping worm,
They speak of Hope, they speak of Faith,
They smile, like rainbows thro' the storm.

Pluck not the flowers! the sacred flowers!
Go where the garden's treasures spread,
Where strange bright blossoms deck the bowers,
And spicy trees their odors shed.
There pluck, if thou delight'st, indeed,
To shorten life so brief as theirs,
But here the admonition heed—
A blessing on the hand that spares!

Pluck not the flowers! In days gone by
A beautiful belief was felt,
That fairy spirits of the sky
Amidst the trembling blossoms dwelt.
Perhaps the dead have many a guest,
Holier than any that are ours,
Perhaps their guardian angels rest
Enshrined amidst the gentle flowers!

Hast thou no loved one lying low,
No broken reed of earthly trust?
Hast thou not felt the bitter woe
With which we render dust to dust?
Thou hast! and in one cherished spot,
Unseen, unknown to earthly eyes,
Within thine heart, the unforgot,
Entombed in silent beauty lies.

Memory, and faith, and love, so deep,
No earthly storm can reach it more—
Affection, that has ceased to weep,
These flourish in thy bosom's core.
Spare then the flowers! With gentle tread,
Draw near, remembering what thou art,
For blossoms sacred to the dead,
Are ever springing in thy heart.

THE MINIATURE.

BY G. P. MORRIS.

William was holding in his hand
The likeness of his wife—
Fresh, as if touched by fairy wand,
With beauty, grace and life.
He almost thought it spoke—he gazed
Upon the treasure still;
Absorbed, delighted and amazed,
He viewed the artist's skill.

"This picture is yourself, dear Jane,
'Tis drawn to nature true;
I've kissed it o'er and o'er again,
It is so much like you."
"And has it kissed you back, my dear?"
"Why no, my love," said he.
"Then, William, it is very clear,
'Tis not at all like me."

SELECTED TALES.

THE BRACELET.

A TALE OF SARATOGA.

The season of 18—was one of unusual brilliancy at Saratoga. For two years previous, the coolness of the spring near extended far into the months allotted to summer, and not only had influenced many, who had long been accustomed to spend the weeks of sultry weather at that place, to bend their course toward the southern springs, but had also dampened the spirits of those who in their constancy still gathered at the famed resort, and abridged the usual gaiety of life and manners that characterized a season at that fashionable watering place.

But now, as if to make amends for past indifference, the spring, in an early month, opened in all the beauty that poets love to dwell on. A genial April sun spread warmth and gladness on the earth, and tempted from their wintry coverts the joyous songsters of the fields and groves. The flowers put forth their blossoms: the green blades of grass were seen peeping here and there through the recent frosty ground; and Nature, wakened from her sleep, put on her freshest and most lovely charms to welcome the advent of her favorite month.

The month of May made good the promises of April, and it now was clearly evident, that the reign of that year's summer was to be long and hot.

And now from all parts of the land flocked company to Saratoga. They came from every State—all ranks and classes, the rich, the powerful, the moderately circumstanced, and the proud and poor. The man of wealth came to display his gold and consequence, and to enjoy as much pleasure as his money could command; the belle to shine amid the crowd of beauty, grace and fashion, and make new conquests to boast of at winter's balls; the wary and judicious mother of marriageable daughters to look for eligible opportunities of acquiring establishments for her girls; the fortune hunter, who had made a desperate effort to fit himself out once more, and thrown his all upon the cost; the invalid to drink the waters and mix with the gay society, in the hope of retarding the approach of death, thinking, poor fool, that while among such brilliant throngs the skeleton would delay his stroke; consumption's victims, as a last resort, to try the powers of the healing springs; gamesters and rakes, to ruin and destroy; men of the world, and men, who had renounced the world all thronged those scenes of gay and brilliant life.

There arrived early at the springs, a new married couple from the south, and few hours had elapsed from the time that they alighted from the coach, before the fame of the beauty of the bride had gone out through the village. As usual, rumor had exaggerated every thing that was first told of her, and a little information that was wormed out of the driver of the coach, for they had not come in the ordinary manner, by railroad, was made the basis of reports as groundless as they were foolish. It was said that the husband was a cotton dealer—a retired merchant—an English lord—and one who fancied that he detected a resemblance between the features of the stranger and a print of a member of Congress, in the barber's shop, asserted positively that he was the Honorable ——— ———, from Kentucky. And then the ladyescaped not their anlmadversions. Stories full as silly were told of her, and had it not been that the curious had by some means discovered that they were husband and wife, and but lately married, it is very probable that they would have hinted of an elopement or some other clandestine affair. All this without knowing any thing about the object of their curiosity. Entirely unconscious of the great interest their arrival had occasioned or at all events paying no heed thereto, the strangers suffered their unknown friends to torment themselves with fruitless conjectures.

Now in the corridor of that same hotel, but at the extreme end, there stood one who, with an apparent air of unconcern, had yet narrowly observed the arrival and movements of the pair. As they passed over the threshold he walked a few steps toward it, but suddenly paused, as though a thought had struck him and then swinging round on his heel, walked back to the place he had occupied, stroking his chin the while with evident satisfaction. He was a man of not more than thirty years of age; well formed and strikingly handsome. His features were very regular and expressive, and there was a fire in his black eyes not often seen. His whiskers were trimmed very neatly, and his cravat was tied in the latest style. The tailor could not improve one whom nature had so highly favored. At the time this tale commences, he had been at Saratoga just two days. Against his name on the hotel books he had written Halford Hall, Somersetshire, England, and had told all with whom he had formed acquaintance, that he was travelling through the United States for pleasure; and one or two to whom he had been more open, gathered from what he occasionally said, that some little difficulty at home had been the immediate cause of his trip across the water. Perhaps an affair with a lady—possibly a duel. Here was a field for conjecture.—Here was a mystery to be perplexed about. He seemed to have plenty of money at command, and as that article is the object of much worship in this country, he soon found ready access to every place and circle which he was desirous of entering. He was very fond of rolling, and went often to the bowling alleys; but though he was once or twice induced to visit the gaming table, and watched the progress of the games with much interest, he only once suffered himself to be persuaded into taking part in the stakes. He played one game and lost—not much, a very trifle, and rose from the table resolved, as he said, never to play again.

There at the end of the corridor, for full two hours after the arrival that had caused so much confusion, he stood absorbed in thought, tapping now and then, unconsciously, one of the wooden pillars, with a little stick that he held in his hand.

The tea bell rung out its welcome sound and soon the long hall was filled with the inmates of the house, to refresh themselves with the "cup that cheers but not inebriates." Very much to the gratification of the company of the house, the new comers of the day took places at the table with the rest. If in her riding habiliments the lady possessed much attraction, how much more was it enhanced, when, divested of that cumbersome attire, she appeared in a light, pretty dress, unadorned with jewels or ornaments of any kind. She was eminently beautiful; her complexion was clear and light, health bloomed in her cheeks, and smiles were wreathed around her mouth. Her husband seemed devoted to her service, he anticipated every little went, and appeared anxious to gratify the slightest wish, even before it was expressed. He would frequently let his eyes rest for several seconds on her face, when unobserved by her, with affection strongly evident; while on her part, she appeared well worthy of all the love that it was in his power to bestow on her. The gentlemen at the table also regarded her with much interest, and one and another would send some little delicacy or bit for her acceptance, much to the dissatisfaction of several fair belles, who were disposed to resent the intrusion, as they termed it, of the lovely bride, and begrudged that attention, which they were compelled to see given to one whom they considered as an usurper of rights, which by long and undisturbed possession, they were persuaded belonged only to themselves. They could not endure the thought of one particle of that attention that they had so long been accustomed to receive, being taken from them and given to a stranger.

Tea was nearly over, when the door at the lower end of the hall was opened, and there entered the Englishman who was introduced to the reader in the corridor of the hotel. He advanced toward the table and took the first vacant seat that presented itself, which happened to be exactly opposite to the newly arrived couple. The little bustle he made in sitting down, caused the lady to raise her eyes from her cup. Had a visitant from the other world met her sight, her countenance could scarcely have undergone a greater change. She became exceedingly pale, the tea in the cup that she held in her hands was spilt over the brim by her agitation, and her whole frame seemed to be under the influence of some very strong emotion. Her alarmed husband sprung up from his chair and clasped her in his arms, just in time to prevent her falling to the floor. The whole company was immediately thrown into confusion, and abandoning their places, flocked round the fainting wife. One called for hartshorn, another for cologne, and forty other things, water, another for cologne, and forty other things, but her husband, adopting the best expedient for the occasion, bore her through the throng into the drawing room, and supported her in a large bow window, where a free draught of air soon revived her.

"Dear Maria," exclaimed the anxious husband, as soon as he perceived the first symptoms of returning animation, "tell me—are you ill?"

"Oh! carry me to my chamber," she whispered, "I am not well indeed. I am not in a fit state to remain here."

With every sign of the most ardent love he supported her trembling steps up the staircase. Having reached their room he laid her gently on the couch, and there having fastened the door to keep out intruders, seated himself by her side and fanned her with much solicitude.

It was perhaps an hour that she laid almost motionless and silent on that couch, only occasionally opening her eyes to look upon her husband.—At last, hearing a long sigh, she looked full in his face, and a faint smile, so very faint as to be scarcely perceptible, spread over her beautiful face.—Faint as it was, he saw it, and with much joy cried out.

"You are better now, dear Maria, are you not?"

"Yes," she answered languidly, "how very queer it was that I should faint, but then I'm subject to such turns."

And so she passed it off with a slight laugh.

"Come," said he rising, "let us go out and take a little walk—perhaps the air will benefit you."—She made no objection but rose from her recumbent position, and was soon arrayed for the walk. They passed down by a back passage in order to avoid observation, and having reached the open air, sauntered toward Congress spring. Their conversation was carried on in a low tone, and many were the terms of endearment that passed between them, still it would have been evident to any one who could have looked upon the lady's face, that her mind was very far from being at ease, and that something of more then ordinary power had occurred, to cause this sudden and mysterious change.

They wandered about till twilight had spread its pensive beauty on things of earth, and the lady had recovered in some degree her customary cheerfulness, when turning round a clump of trees in the neighborhood of one of the springs, the forms of two men, rendered indistinct by the obscurity of the evening, passed near them and they heard their voices in conversation. They were not near enough to enable the two to understand of what they were talking, but low as they spoke, it had a strange effect upon the lady. She had recognized the voice of one.

"Let us go back!" she hurriedly exclaimed, "come—come, I am—very ill—again."

"Good heavens!" cried her husband in anxious tones, "I fear some disease is upon you. Quick, to the house,—something must be done."

And hardly knowing how she went, the lady suffered herself to be hastened to the hotel, and no sooner had she reached her room than she threw herself upon the couch and gave way to a flood of tears.

Her idolizing, yet half distracted husband, stayed but to cast a single glance upon her, and then hurried down to the office, and despatched a messenger for the best medical aid that the village afforded.

He had left his wife for only two or three minutes, when her door, which was ajar, was pushed a little further open, and there entered—the Englishman. It would seem that he had watched his opportunity, for now advancing to the couch whereon laid the lady with her handkerchief, he said in a careless tone,

"Well, Maria—are you not glad to see me?"

Supposing the step to have been that of her husband, she had not moved at his approach, but now with the first word that the intruder uttered, she sprang to the floor, and cried out,

"In Heaven's name, Herbert, why have you come here—go, go—quick, or he will come back and find you here. Do go!—oh! for Heaven's sake, go!" "Go," he answered, 'for what? So you have married the rich Mr. Holcroft, it seems. Well, I've no fear of him."

"No—no, not of him,—he should not harm you," she exclaimed wildly, "but others can.—Why did you come to this country?—why not France, Italy—any other place. There go—go—oh! do go!"

"Maria, I am growing poor," he rejoined in a voice, cool and dispassionate, and in strange contrast to hers. She flew to her trunk, took out a bracelet and putting it into his hand, said,

"There, take that—I've no money, but sell that. Now go—go from the land—oh! my God, there is his step upon the stair!"

And the poor, frenzied Maria threw herself again upon the couch. The Englishman held up, for a second's space, the jewelled ornament in the light of the entry lamp that shone into the room, and then as if satisfied of its value, clutched it firmly and passed immediately into the entry.—He had barely time to cross the landing and enter another chamber, the door of which, fortunately for him, stood open, when Mr. Holcroft (for by his name he will now be known,) ascended the stairs, three at a time, and hurried to the aid of his wife, who now seemed struggling in convulsions.—Whether he was seen by Mr. Holcroft, the Englishman could not determine, but not staying to learn, he availed himself of the opportunity of the moment, and made good his retreat.

In a few moments the physician arrived and was shown up to Mr. Holcroft's room, where he found him in an agony of grief, vainly endeavoring to relieve his wife of the great distress and suffering that she was in. A strong fit was upon her and she appeared to be struggling fearfully with death.

"Save her! save her!" exclaimed the distracted husband, grasping the physician's arm, "spare nothing—any money!"

He could say no more, but sunk exhausted into a chair. The physician bade the servant who had remained to light the lamps, hurry to an apothecary's shop with a recipie, which he had hurriedly written on a blank leaf, torn from a book, and bring the medicines to him immediately. He then commenced chafing the limbs of the sufferer, and as soon as he had got the articles he had sent for, forced a considerable quantity of one of the mixtures down her throat. In agonizing suspense the husband hung over her, and watched the effect, and to his great joy, perceived that she was soon, somewhat relieved. Encouraged by this, he put his arm under her head and raised it a little, while another dose of the liquid was poured into her mouth. Gradually,—very gradually, her spasms abated until they entirely ceased: and then the physician motioned to Mr. Holcroft to withdraw his arm.

"Let her lay quiet for a little while now—disturb her not—it has passed off, and I think she is now safe."

"Thank God!" replied the husband, from the bottom of his heart. "She must have received some sudden shock," said the other, "to have reduced her to this state."

"I know not what the cause was," was the reply, "this afternoon she was in perfect health—it was sudden—it was strange—very strange."

The physician stayed till morning; and all the night the husband watched over his adored wife, in a state better conceived than described. Towards morning she moved a little from the motionless position in which she had laid for hours, and when the physician clasped her wrist to feel of her pulse, she opened her eyes and uttered a few words.—But there was a wildness in her look, and an incoherence in her speech, that struck another dagger to her husband's heart.

Oh! with what anxiety he waited for the physician to speak.

"She is in no danger—at least, I think in none," said the latter, after a pause of several minutes, "the first blow of the disease, whatever it is, has passed off without serious injury to her, though it has left her in a high state of fever; still I think you need not be apprehensive of any danger."

"Spare no pains—go to any expense," rejoined Mr. Holcroft, grasping his hand, only save her life."

"She must be kept quiet," added the physician, "but stillness, I fear, is not to be thought of in such a place as this. But it will not do to move her."

"I will hire every room in the wing, and place a sentinel at the bottom of the stairs," said Mr. Holcoft with much emphasis. The physician smiled.

"You need not do that," he said, for I think you may be able to induce all who occupy rooms in this quarter of the building, to move about as quietly as possible."

And he was right. The occupants of the wing in which that room was situated, sympathised with Mr. Holcroft in his affliction, and readily agreed to do all in their power to hasten the return of his lovely bride to health and strength. For weeks, that part of the hotel was as noiseless as the wards of a hospital.

Four weeks—four long and tedious weeks dragged on ere the sick one could leave her bed, and then it was painful to see what a change that interval had wrought in her countenance and form. Pale, ghastly, emaciated, she seemed a different being. But in the joy of her restoration to him from the grave, as it were, reconciled Mr. Holcroft to the loss, for the time, of that beauty of face and figure, that he had so often delighted to gaze upon.

The feelings and thoughts of his wife during the period of her convalescence, may be easily conjectured. Two objects of absorbing interest occupied her mind during her waking moments. One was a burning desire to know if the Englishman had left the place or not, and the other was anxiety lest her husband should discover the absence of the bracelet, for it was one of great value, and had belonged to his mother. He had clasped it on the wrist of his wife on their wedding day, with many cautions not to lose it. Concerning her persecutor, for so he may be termed, she dared make no enquiries, and she was unable to glean from the conversation of those she was permitted to see, anything that could afford her any relief.—When she had acquired sufficient strength she was allowed to ride out through the village and its vicinity, but though she made the best use of her time, she saw nothing of the object of her dread and the belief that he had really gone off being stetled in her mind, it tended much to accelerate her return to health.

And thus passed off two more weeks. At the end of the time, Mr. Holcroft thought that she could bear with safety their journey home, to which place she had earnestly desired to return. Accordingly the requisite preparations were made to leave the Springs, to her the scene of so much misery and pain.

We pass over the interval of two or three days that occurred before their arrangements were completed, for time and space, two inexorable monitors, will not permit us to multiply details.

It was a beautiful July morning, when, their baggage having been sent down to the coach which was at the door, Mr. Holcroft, with his wife leaning on his arm and looking, from the effects of her recent sickness, more interesting than ever, descended to the great hall in their way to the coach. Before they were half way down the stairs they were sensible of much confusion in the hall below, and on entering, they found themselves in the midst of a great uproar. Some twenty or thirty men, including the keeper of the hotel and his assistants of the office, were gathered round two persons who were violently struggling with each other. There were cries of "send for the police!" "search him!" "hold him fast!" and a hundred others of similar purport.

What was Mrs. Holcroft's horror at recognizing in one of the combatants, the man to whom she had given the bracelet.

"He's got it, I know!" exclaimed the antagonist of the Englishman, "I felt it drawn out—take hold here and let me search him."

With those words, several seized the accused man. "He's a great rascal!" cried out one who at that moment came in, "I knew him in England. He's a forger and pickpocket!"

—even that the confusion increased.

"Oh, let us go!" said the alarmed lady to her husband, "do let us get away from this place"

But the passage was blocked up.

"Here it is—here it is!" cried out a dozen voices, and a pocket book that had been forcibly wrested from the Englishman, was passed from hand to hand.

"And here's a bracelet!" cried several, "he's been stealing somewhere else!"

"Why Maria!" exclaimed Mr. Holcroft, "that looks like yours—have you—have you lost it?"

And without waiting for a reply he darted forward, while his wife, speechless and terrified, grasped a table to keep her from falling to the floor.

"Let me look at that bracelet," cried Mr. Holcroft, 'I believe it belongs to my wife. He must have stolen it from her trunk.'

'It is a lie!' fiercely responded the Englishman, who now released from the grasp of those who had held him while he was searched, stood a little apart from the rest, 'I say it is a lie. Your wife gave it to me!'

'What!' cried all simultaneously, while the countenance of Mr. Holcroft was lit up by a expression that it would be impossible to describe.

"I say your wife gave it to me," he repeated, "ask her—she'll not deny it."

Mr. Holcroft flew to her, just in time to catch her sinking form in his arms.

"Oh! Henry, Henry," she sobbed out, "forgive me—he is—he is—my brother!"

Maria Delancy was of English birth, and belonged to a family which, though reduced from affluence to poverty, was highly connected. Her brother, brought up to suppose himself the heir to great wealth, had contracted luxurious and expensive habits, which, on learning the real state of the funds of the family, at his father's decease, and the necessity of strict economy, he found it difficult to break up. Being a man of rather loose principles, he scrupled not to resort to measures of a rather doubtful morality, in order to gratify his propensities. One thing led to another, till finally he committed forgery, and fled from his country, no one knew whither. His sister entered the family of a nobleman as a governess, and it was while with his family on a visit to America, that she was seen and admired by Mr. Holcroft, a wealthy southern planter. Admiration ripened into love; he offered himself and was excepted. We believe that this will explain what has now been dark to the reader.

The unfortunate Delancy was arrested for stealing the pocket book. Mr. Holcroft, out of regard to his wife, bailed him, and told him to clear out. He took the permission and went, and his sister never heard of him more.

For some few days after the departure of Mr. Holcroft and his wife, this affair was a popular topic of conversation, but like all such topics it soon ceased to be of interest, and was only occasionally alluded to. Fresh objects attention sprung up, and long before the c of the season, that matter had nearly faded f the minds of the visitors at Saratoga.

FATTENING HOGS,

Though our potato harvest will be light must not think of depending on Cincinnati pork. Ohio has suffered more from dry we er this season than our own State has, and must hash up something or other to fill ou middlings and the spare rib. If you ha boiler you will fill it with various materia be cooked and mixed with your meal; for as prices now are, must be your main relia for fattening. Pumpkins, refuse squashes, s potatoes, and refuse apples make a good and keep up the appetite of the porker. the sake of variety the greenest ears of may still be chopped up short with an axe block; and if your cuts are but half an long, the cob will be eaten with the corn. boiling, or sweet corn, is best adapted to purpose.

As to sending cob and corn to mill and ing double toll for grinding, we have not a high opinion. Such feed is good for horses for neat cattle; but the cost of carrying a grinding is rather too high for the price of If we could have iron corn crackers in our barns or yards, turned by a horse, we m save the toll and the time of going to m We might have mills that would crush not the cob with the corn, but the green stalks and large green stalks, crushed, would be down to the butt. Remember to give a brimstone occasionally, and let your pigs charcoal to keep their stomachs right.—Ploughman.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 11, 1845.

WHIG NOMINATIONS.

FOR GOVERNOR

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

JOHN REED.

A NEW RAILROAD TO BOSTON.

The subject of a new Railroad to Boston has excited considerable attention of late, in this vicinity; and we understand strong efforts will be made to have the claims of the Malden Route Petitioners presented in their proper light before the Legislature of next winter. Of the immense importance of Railroad accommodation to the interests of the people of Danvers there can be no doubt. There is no town of its size in the State, which is less accommodated with Railroad facilities, than Danvers; and the business of the place, the number of its inhabitants and their connection with Boston in their trade, seem to create if not a necessity, certainly strong claims for such accommodation; and render it highly probable that a Road if constructed would support itself. Of the two routes proposed, viz, one to connect with the Eastern Road at Salem; and one commencing at Salem, to connect with the Main Extension Road at Malden; the town has, we think wisely for its own interests, always strongly inclined in favor of the latter. The unexpected opposition the Petitioners met with in the Senate, last winter—the unprecedented efforts, and combinations of powerful and wealthy Railroad Corporations throughout the State, to retain, if possible, a monopoly of the travel within their reach, and thus prevent the chartering of Roads which if built might receive some of the travel they had been accustomed to receive, had the effect to discourage many, who ardently desired such new road, from making further attempts at the time; but it never had the effect to make proselytes to the theory assumed, that Railroads have peculiar claims to monopolize travel. On the other hand, if we mistake not, the zeal and vigor with which the subject will be resumed the coming winter, will show that the people are not to be coerced to adopt principles and measures which they believe inimical to their interests and prosperity.

That opposition to all projects for new roads, will come from those already constructed, is always to be expected, but the public should scrutinize carefully whether the array of arguments and statements brought up by such existing roads, are advanced with a disinterested desire for the public good, or whether in all their apparent interest for the public weal, and 'honest indignation' at what they consider encroachments upon the rights of corporations constituted for the public benefit, they are not actuated by the selfish desire to retain a monopoly of travel. This much at least is certain, opposition to the chartering of new roads, comes only from existing ones, and excepting the stockholders in such roads and those under their immediate influence, we find the whole community are in favor of granting charters for new roads wherever desired—thus preserving and sustaining the enlightened and liberal policy the State has ever hitherto pursued upon the subject of internal improvements. which has had the effect to unite the State in all parts by strong bands, and give life and energy to all kinds of labor.

We believe that independent of the better and more commodious depot of the Maine Extension Road, the avoiding the inconvenience and delay of the Ferry, and the saving of distance and time in going to Boston, such a road will tend essentially to increase the business and prosperity of this place The communication with Boston will be so direct and easy that purchasers of leather, shoes and other articles manufactured here, will come among the manufacturers themselves to purchase, instead of purchasing of large dealers in Boston, who now sell their articles upon commissions which come out of the manufacturers. It will tend more to centralize business here, and we believe that if such a road is constructed that one year will show a great increase in the value of real estate in this town. It is a project worthy of effort. It is one of equal interest to all portions of the town, and we can but hope and trust that the general interests of the place will cause all to unite in its support.

Western Railroad. The receipts for passengers and freight for the week ending September 27th, was $19,426, being about $2000 more than the corresponding week of 1844. Railroad property must improve with the increase of population and travel, and roads which a few years since barely supported themselves have now a good and increasing income.

☞We had the pleasure of listening to the Musical entertainment given by Mr. Covert on Thursday evening last, and were exceedingly gratified, not only with the performance, but with the spirit manifested by the performers, who, notwithstanding the audience which was very small, owing probably to the unfavorable state of the weather, exerted themselves to the utmost to please the few. It is the intention to repeat the Concert on some evening next week, when Mr. Dodge, who has recovered from his recent illness, is expected to assist.

ELECTION IN MARYLAND.

The result of the election in this state is as follows: of the Congressional delegation, there will be 2 Whigs and 4 Locos, In the Legislature, the Whigs will have a majority in both branches viz :—House of Delegates, 11 maj. Senate 7 maj

ESSEX COUNTY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

We believe our County may claim the credit of having formed and sustained the first Teachers' Association within the United States, and presuming that our readers feel an interest in all educational movements we wish, briefly to allude to its organization and operations. Early in the year 1830, a meeting of the friends of Education met at Topsfield, for the purpose of forming a County Association for "the improvement of teachres and the system of Education generally." If we mistake not the Rev. G. B. Perry, of Bradford was one of the early and active movers in the project, and his subsequent interest has proved him to be one of the most devoted and efficient friends of popular Education, within our County and State. Among others who engaged with him "in its formation and support were B. Greenleaf Esq—the well known author of an excellent series of Arithmetics and an active Teacher, N. Cleaveland Esq. for many years the accomplished principal of Dummer Academy but now at the head of a flourishing female seminary in Brooklyn, N. Y., and O. Carlton Esq., the very popular and efficient teacher of the Latin School in Salem. To these gentlemen and others unknown to the writer, belongs much of the credit for whatever of good may have resulted from the operations of the E. C. T. Association during the 16 years of its existence.

We have said that it is the oldest institution of the kind within the U. S. and we think we are correct.—The Association has, without a single failure, held two meetings in each year, each occupying two days. At their meetings the exercises have consisted of Lectures and discussions and of the former nearly one hundred have been read, and we presume the whole County has been greatly benefitted by them.

The expenses of the Association have been defrayed by members, several ineffectual attempts having been made to obtain Legislative aid. Within a few months the Association has received the present of $100 from that well known friend of Education, Hon. Edmund Dwight, and we trust he may live to see that his generosity has not been misapplied. But the fruits of the Association are of a nature so gradual and unobstusive in their devolopment that the casual observer may fail to see them. The Association holds its meetings and teachers of limited experience and those of "large experience" meet together on common ground and after a season spent in interchange of views and feelings and discussion of the great principles of Education, each goes to his own appropriate field of labor quietly and more successfully to discharge his duties. Thus the different portions of the County come together and mutually benefit each other, and an incalculable amount of good must result and, we believe, has resulted from these meetings.

But we did not intend to say so much, though we would gladly say much more. It will be seen by notice in our columns, that the 16th Annual Meeting will be held at Ipswich next week, and we earnestly call the attention of the friends of schools to this meeting. May we not hope that they will attend and thus show that they feel as deep an interest in what ever pertains to the intellectual advancement of their children as they do in the improvement of their cattle and swine.

The following is the list, nominated by the Whig Convention, at Ipswich, on Thursday last, as candidates for Senators from Essex county. We understand that J. C. Perkins, Esq., lacked but a single vote of an election as a candidate from Salem.

Edmund Kimball, of Wenham.
George Wheatland, of Salem.
Henry Poor, of Danvers.
Dennis Condrey of Newburyport.
George Hodges, of Andover.

The Onion Crop. We are pleased to learn that the growers of this important vegetable have secured a good harvest. The quality also is said to be this year uncommonly good. We have heard of one cultivator in this place who has raised this season on 6 or 7 acres of land 3000 bushels. There are other instances where fields have yielded at the rate of 800 bushels to the acre. Notwithstanding the large quantities raised, the demand is quite active and many have been already sold for domestic use and exportation. The demand for the latter purpose is yearly increasing and the cultivators are expecting to sell at an advanced price later in the season. Our gardeners, from long experience in the cultivation of this crop and their skilful management of the soil by rich manuring are enabled to obtain valuable returns for their labor.

City of Essex. We frequently see this cognomen applied in the newspapers to the embryo city on the north bank of the Merrimack. It is hardly to be expected that the projectors of that great undertaking would select this name, or that the Legislature would consent to its adoption when we have a town of the same name in the County. The practice of naming all new settlements after some older one has become a great and growing nuisance especially in the direction of letters and we hope it will be discontinued.—We think it much more likely that the proposed city will receive either the name of Lawrence or Appleton.

Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen has been dangerously ill, at his residence in New York city. He is now in a fair way to recover.

John M. Brewster, of Pittsfield, has been nominated as the Third Party Candidate for Lieut. Governor, in place of Elihu Burritt, declined.

The New York Herald contains an account of a name attempt to assassinate Mr. Paine of Oxford, who is now in Washington, on business. It is said he was shot at, while standing in the portico of the U. S. Hotel in that city.

The number of operatives in Lowell, is estimated at 9, 235, of whom 6, 320 are females. There are 33 mills, and the whole capital invested is $12,000,000. There is made in Lowell every week, 1,459,100 yards of cloth. The wages paid out, annually, amount to more than $15,000,000.

TEMPERANCE.

It seems to be generally agreed, that the efforts for the promotion of temperance are completely paralized—and although the Sons of Temperance and Rechabites boast of their increase of numbers, yet there is an increase of drunkenness. And it would seem that if anything would arouse the apathy of the friends of temperance, to some vigorous effort to put a stop to the various "breathing holes of hell" in this vicinity, it is the circumstances that are constantly occurring in our very midst. Within a short time, one man has been killed in a state of intoxication—another, a rum seller, nearly so. Another circumstance has taken place this week which it is painful to reflect upon:—Many will recollect that about four years ago, an individual from the Rocks was brought before a magistrate for drunkenness, when it came out in the examination that the evening before, he had while carrying home some flour for his family, sold it to a noted rum-seller between here and the Rocks, for rum, thus turning his children's bread into poison for himself. That individual was prevailed upon at that time to sign the pledge, and he has religiously kept it till the present week, when some of the satelites of the various rumsellers in the Rocks, have prevailed against him, and he has fallen—and it is said, the very rum-seller who before bought his flour, on Thursday went to his house to take articles out of it, which he said he had bought of the intoxicated man; how he paid for them, every one must judge for himself. Such facts as these are lamentable—here is an individual who for four years has been a good husband, a good provider for his family—has got him a little house nearly finished,—now fallen; and his betrayers glorying in his shame, and ready even to take the necessaries of life from his family, for the purpose of feeding him on "hell broth." Where are our Temperance Societies? Where are our police officers?—Where are the friends of humanity in this crisis?—Echo answers, Where?

NATIVE AMERICANISM.

Printed Circulars have been sent through the Post Office to some of our clergymen and others, headed, To all good and true men throughout our beloved Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging them to support Native Americanism. We give the closing paragraph with the italicising of the Circular.

☞While, however, we thus request your attention to this one point, we would not have you unmindful of the collateral issues which this movement involves. The discerning mind will not fail to perceive the increased importance which they give to immediate efficient action. We trust they will be plain to you, and that your estimate of them will be shown by the support of such ticket as may have its basis upon this platform.

We should like to know what these "collateral issues" are which are so plain to the discerning mind.—Is not such a proceedure by a party who pretend to such high principles sickening and contemptible?—An open, manly foe may be respected, but one who proceeds covertly by insinuations rather than by open professions, must be detested. The Circular is signed by the Committee of Suffolk County.

Mr. Northend's Book Keeping. This work should we think be in the hands of every young mechanic.—It is a system by which any one can learn Book Keeping for himself, without the aid of a teacher. The following notice of it we cut from the Exeter News Letter.

These are good books for schools and good books for farmers. In this buying, selling, swapping, trading world, everybody who would bustle about in it, and have any thing to do with it, should know how to keep accounts, and should keep them. According to some late decisions of our Courts, three fourths of the account boods kept by our farmers are not much better than the same quantitty of waste paper. And yet it is very easy to keep such accounts as would answer every purpose of an honest man, and stand the test of the law. Mr Northend's object is to furnish an easy and correct system of book-keeping for farmers and mechanics just beginning business. He teaches by precept and example. He tells you what to do and shows you how it is done. In the first book, he gives you directions for keeping a day-book, waste-book or journal :—then gives 4 pages of such a day-book exemplifying the mode of making entries & keeping a book—and then leaves 40 or 50 blank pages properly ruled for keeping accounts—affording 'ample space and verge enough' for a common farmer's accounts for two or three years. With this book before him, any man who can write at all, can keep such accounts as a lawyer would not quarrel with, and a Court would not reject.

Mr Northend's second book is a specimen Ledger; or a condensed transcript of the Day-Book or journal, It is not practically of so much importance as the first book to the moderate Farmer; but to the mechanic and to the farmer of much business, it is almost equally indispensable. In this book, as in the first of the series, there are Rules, Exercises, and 24 blank pages, properly ruled and prepared for a Ledger on a small scale.

Both books are sold, we believe, at 50 cents and are worth more than that money to every man who has occasion to keep accounts and does not know how to keep them.

A man has been arrested in Philadelphia, supposed to have been concerned in the robbery of Mr. Rowley, of Wrentham, of $27,000, a week since.

The Press and Type of Mr. Clay. C M Clay very properly refused to have any thing to do with the press and the type of which T. F. Marshall, J. B. Clay and their coadjutors took possession, and which they shipped to Cincinnati. We presume, of course, he will bring an action for damages against those gentlemen, so that they may yet have to pay dearly for their whistle.

Advantages of Advertising. A short time since one of the papers published at Dedham, mentioned the fact, that the jail in that town was without tenants, and advertised it "to let."—We see by the Democrat of last week that the jail is now "full and running over," and the Democrat says it will have to be enlarged. So much for advertising.

Rev. C. Torrey. A correspondent of the Hallowell (Me.) Standard, who lately visited this individual in the Maryland Penitentiary, states that his confinement is undermining his health; his eyes are dim, his voice hoarse, and his spirits depressed; and it is feared he can not live out the period (five years) for which he was sentenced.

"THE SCHOOL MASTER ABROAD."

Mr. Editor—In your paper of the last week, I noticed a letter purporting to come from "P W. W." who (if the letter is genuine) has offered himself as a candidate as a teacher for one of our public schools. Can it be possible, that the writer of such a letter, could offer himself as qualified for this employment? To say nothing of the malignity and venom manifested in the temper of the writer; or of the correctness or incorrectness of the facts which he presumes to assert, every line of it indicates clearly his utter want of decent qualifications as a teacher. We have no other knowledge of this Mr. "P. W. W" than appears in his published letter; but if such men are to put themselves forward as qualified teachers of youth, and are to be approved as such,—it is high time for REFORM. We have heard of arguments being used in favor of approbation, from sympathy in the necessities of the applicant, or his friends; but we think committees should also have their sympathies awake to the wants of those who are to be taught. While teachers are approved merely upon the perusal of letters recommendatory, stamped to order, and examinations are passed over as mere forms required by law, it will be vain to expect the condition of our schools to be improved. We hope our committee will not be deterred in the discharge of their duties with good fidelity, even though they may be overloaded with anathemas like the one referred to. If we mistake not, such productions will ever bear heaviest upon their authors.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—Your correspoudent, the North Danvers Representative, says he never was more at a loss from what point to take his departure than he is at present—I believe him and think his last communication sufficiently confirms what he says. The gentleman says, however, that "his whole endeavor was to show that the Representatives were instructed," and that "the entire doings of the town upon this question of instructions have been published," and that I have seen fit "to pass them in silence in hopes to divert attention," &c. Has the gentleman so much "fog" around him that he cannot read? I stated in my last that "in all the array of evidence presented by the N. D. R., not one word was said about instructing the Danvers Representatives, and for the very good reason that they were chosen to look after the interests of the town and to seize every opportunity to advance its interests. Is this passing them in silence? The gentleman has asked, if when I wrote these petitions I did not mean them for instructions? Why, certainly not, if I had I should have said so, and so would the town. The town chose nine persons as a committee "to adopt all such measures to advance the interests of the town as they may think proper. Here were instructions to advance the interests of the town as they may think proper.—The Representatives have this discretionary power by virtue of their office, and how absurd it is to suppose that the town intended to restrict them in the exercise of it, without saying a word about it, when they gave this power to the committee. I might pursue this enquiry and show that the nature of the business required the exercise of the power delegated to the committee, but I think I have said enough to establish the fact that no restrictions were put by the town upon the Representatives to prevent them from adopting such measures as they might think best calculated to promote the interests of the town. I now propose to call the attention of the N. D. R. to a fact that I stated at the outset as one of the principal reasons for the opinion I then expressed: this fact I have repeated a number of times hoping to get the gentleman to notice it, but although he has seemed to run his "jib boom" in almost every direction he has proved himself adroit sailor enough to keep clear of this. The fact is this that after hearing the evidence before the committee, and having had the best opportunity to learn the merits of the whole questions involved, the N. D R. did state most emphatically, to a number of his immediate constituents, "THAT THE BRANCH FROM THE EASTERN RAILROAD WAS THE BEST THING WE COULD HAVE, AND THE ONLY THING WE SHOULD GET, AND IF WE DID NOT GET IT THEN WE MIGHT NEVER GET IT." Now I ask would the N. D. R. entertaining this opinion, have gone to work to do all in his power to oppose this branch unless he had been operated upon by some extraordinary appliances. Will the gentleman explain now? I stated some facts in my last to show that the N. D. R. was not governed by his pretended instructions, and as he has taken no notice of them I must try him again. I stated that one of the committee told me that he was very much surprised at the course of the N. D. R., and seeing him soon after the court rose, he asked him how he came to do so, and he replied that the reason was, that "the South Parish folks were all opposed to having the bill pass with the amendments, and they said it would make such a quarrel between the North and South parts of the town that it would destroy all harmony, and to save the town from this he consented to do as he did;" but not one word did he say about the instructions of the town. This statement is not denied by the gentleman, but the adroitness he has displayed in leaping over this barrier to seize his "instructions" and carry them back to the 28th of January is really amusing. If this story is true as I have no doubt it is, his instructions as far as they could avail him anything in justification of his conduct are blown "sky high" by his own story! I think the N. D. R. has furnished a key to unlock the mystery, and although the whole may not be told we have enough to show where the N. D. R. should stand: we cannot allow him but one stool to stand upon and I think this the one he ought to use, for I suppose in his honest simplicity he chose this before he had instructions from the South to take the other.

I hope the gentleman will not now complain but that I have noticed his "instructions," and if he is not satisfied that I have sustained my position on this point, I shall be happy "to give a specimen of my magnanimity in discussing it" further, for as the gentleman admits that this is the only issue between us it follows that if I succeed I shall establish the justice of my "dish of inferences," and I would therefore advise my friend to hold on by his instructions as long as there is the sign of the breath of life in them. If the gentleman will condescend to undertake to reply to the above I think he will have enough for one communication, and I will waive all comments upon the "low and invective strain" of our respective communications, as I have no fears but that our readers have the capacity to settle this matter without much of our help. E.

☞Hon. William Russels, formerly member of Congress from the Chillicothe district, Ohio, and his son, both died on the same night in Scioto county, in that state, last week.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor. It is a peculiar and most invaluable privilege of the constituency of our government, that our rulers and public men are ameniable to the people, and that whenever they violate by their decisions or laws, any great principle, which had the sanction and support of public sentiment, they are inevitably shorn of their power by the noiseless, but resistless energy of the ballot box. So that the laws of the land, and the great principles of legislation are but a transcript of the public will. So true is this, that it has been said, and justly, that the character of the people may be read in their statute book.

Thus in the progress of society, the advancement of civilization is constantly lopping off, one after another, those excresences which have grown up in ages of comparative darkness, in time, under institutions less favourable to the cause of human liberty and equal rights. Accordingly we find, that both in this country and in England, within a century past, very much has been done to ameliorate the condition of the people by the abolition of odious monopolies, by the prohibition of exclusive privileges—by breaking down those obstinate barriers to improvements which have been incorporated under the name of "vested rights" with the whole system of legislation; until almost every department of profitable industry came to be claimed by some privileged quarter as exclusion property, thus clogging society and seriously obstructing the progress, which is the legitimate result of human advancement and civilization.

These disastrous effects being perceived and realized, have produced, as before stated, the overthrow of the whole doctrine upon which were based the claims to "monopolies" "exclusive privileges" —"vested rights", &c. &c. No such claim is at this day recognized in England; and in our own country, the whole controversy has been forever settled by the highest judicial tribunal of the land, some dozen years ago, in the celebrated case of the proprietors of Charles River Bridge, against the Warren Bridge Corporation; when it was determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, that no legal right of the proprietors of Charles River Bridge, had been violated by the establishment of Warren Bridge—and that when they received their charter, they received it, subject to the right of the legislature to authorize another bridge over Charles river when the public convenience should require it. And this is now the received and universally acknowledged law of this country.

Yet in the face of these facts and this law were the people of Danvers denied the right to construct a Railroad, by the Railroad committee and senate of Massachusetts last year agreeably to the wishes, and in consequence of the exertions of an interested corporation who, while they admitted that the population and business of your town required railroad accommodations; successfully prevailed with the senate to deny you a charter, on the sole ground that it would conflict with their vested rights.

Now the modesty of this Corporation must be apparent to all in thus resisting the wishes of a large body of the citizens of the county of Essex, who only ask that they may at their own expense avail themselves of a common mode of conveyance and transportation; and without which they cannot successfully compete with other sections of the commonwealth engaged in the same business with themselves and who are in the enjoyment of the facilities in question, especially when it is remembered that this corporation in 1836, when they obtained their charter, endeavored to obtain with it some special favour—some proscriptive clause; but in accordance with the recognized and settled policy of the Commonwealth they were denied this, and instead thereof, it was inserted in the ninth article of their act of incorporation, as follows: "The comonwealth may authorize any company to enter with another Railroad, paying for the right to use the same, or any part thereof, such a rate of toll as the legislature may from time to time prescribe."

Thus these corporators may learn, if they will study the special law on which their existence is founded, that instead of securing to themselves by their vested rights; (derived as they say from this special law,) the absolute and exclusive privilege to transport persons and property forever which may happen to be located in any town through which they pass, or even in the vicinity of any, for Danvers is altogether avoided by their route—that the commonwealth has not only reserved to itself the right to establish another and an independent road, in the immediate vicinity of the Eastern Railroad; but to authorize "any company" to connect themselves with, and "use the same, or any part thereof," whether these corporators are willing or not.

And further, the commonwealth, notwithstanding all the honest detestation these conscientious grantees entertain towards those who would fain plant another Railroad on the already patented soil of old Essex, in direct violation of their exclusive rights, may, according to its express stipulation with these people, not only enter their road at "any point" with "another Railroad," but they reserve to themselves the right, (and a great one it is,) to say what that other Railroad shall pay for the use of the road so taken. The government would not leave this matter to be fixed by this corporation, and the reason is obvious. It was to prevent their acquiring any thing like a monopoly. It was that they should not by unreasonable or exorbitant rates of toll, prevent the establishment of other roads. The very principle that the government by a wise forecast thus endeavored to promulgate and establish, they are endeavoring to break down under the mockery of vested rights.

I wish to present this subject to the electors of Essex County, so far as they are included among your readers and therefore Mr. Editor, with your permission, I will resume this subject at a future time. I purpose not at present, to discuss the profitableness of the stock, or the certainty of its being taken up: and although every man knows that had the charter been granted, the last dollar would have been long since subscribed, and good progress made in the work, still, these are minor points compared with the rights of the public generally, and of your town in particular, yet of sufficient importance, to receive due consideration at a proper time. T.

NEW ENGLAND

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 254, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. John Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads.

Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback, walk, perfect ease and safety.

Mr Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapsus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

May 31 JAMES FREDERICK FOSTER.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.

ARE the best and most popular medicines for people of all ages, country, and climates, and in every condition of life. They are compounded of the essences of vegetables from many nations. Their taste is inexpressibly delightful. They cause no pain in their operations, but the first change of feeling after taking them is, that of pleasure, and they cleanse the stomach and bowels more perfectly than any other purgative medicines.

The most wonderful and surprising cures have been effected by them in different parts of the earth. How these purgative lozenges do speedily purify the blood, and substitute health for sickness, is a mystery to the most eminent members of the healing art. Such purgative medicines must become universal, and supersede the use of all other purgative compounds and as long as disease continues to afflict people, so long will these Lozenges remain unrivalled in all coming time throughout the world. Every person who travels should carry them—every family should keep them—and every sick man, woman, or child should take them.

FALES' WORM LOZENGES,

Are a safe and sure remedy for worms. Children love them. They act like a charm in removing the symptoms such as starting in sleep, grating the teeth paleness about the mouth and nose, occasional sickness at stomach, precarious appetite, swelled bowels, and general feverish habit, The child falls into a quiet sleep, and the worms are stupified and expelled and the child, as far as heard from, in every instance has been cured. Price, 25 cents per box, with full directions; sold at Commercial street, Boston,

FALES' COUGH LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common Colds and Coughs, Whooping Cough, Inflamation of the Throat and Lungs, in the Croup or Hives, and more certain to act satisfactory than the celebrated Hive Syrup. The most happy effect is obtained in a few moments; the symptoms disappear and the disease is broken up by the magical effect of these Lozenges. Full directions accompany each box, are found at the Depository 96 Commercial street, Boston.

FALES' DYSENTERY LOZENGES,

Are a safe and agreeable remedy for Dysentery, Diarrhœa and Bowel Complaints of children. Particular attention must be paid to the directions which are on each box.

FALES' CAMPHOR LOZENGES,

Are beneficial in all common and sick head ache, and where there is a sense of tightness or weight over the eyes, in erruptive diseases, such as Measles and Small Pox. Also in Mania, Epilepsy, Melancholy, Hysteria, in St. Vitus Dance, and in all cases of languor and oppession of the Vital powers, may be taken with safety by women and children in all conditions. Full directions accompany each box.

FALES' CYPRIAN HAIR TONIC,

Is now so extensively known and justly celebrated that further comment upon it will be useless, we can say, however, that among the many thousands who have purchassed the Tonic, in this and other countries, none have returned with complaints, while thousands have expressed not only their approbation, but their wonder and admiration on beholding its effects. A few bottles only can be had at 96 Commercial street Boston.

CLEAR OUT YOUR RATS.

The gnawing and antics of these destructive creatures can be hushed forever in your house and store, if you will procure a box of the genuine.

MADAGASCAR RAT EXTERMINATOR,

and use it according to directionf. You cannot depend upon it unless obtained at J. J. FALES' No. 96 Commercial street Boston.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

POETRY.

A WORD AT PARTING.

'How can I say farewell to thee—
How can I say farewell!
When in the compass of that word,
Such mournful meanings dwell—
When thoughts that make the cheeks turn pale,
And overcloud the heart,
Are wakened by that startling sound
That tells me, we must part!'

* * * * * *

'The spring may come with wreaths of flowers
And young buds round her brow,
Her first green footprints on the hills
Are shining, even now!
But ah! the tinted flowers may bloom,
The birds sing on the spray,
Thy beauty and thy voice of mirth
Are dearer far than they!'

'Oh! we shall miss th' unconscious spell
Thy presence round us cast;
Beneath whose magic influence
The hours unheeded past;
And oftentimes a voice will sigh
Regretfully sincere,
'Oh! would that she were here to-night—
O would that she were here!' '.

'And could I hope that sometimes thou
When casting back a glance,
Would lavish on thy absent friend
One brief regret perchance,
I should be rich in the belief,
And happy in the thought,
That thou rememberest one, by whom
Thou ne'er can'st be forgot.'

'I cannot speak the hopes and fears
Which parting thus, I feel;
And which could I express, perhaps
I might not all reveal,
But O how how trebly painful were
This moment I deplore,
If fate should whisper in my ear
'Ye part—to meet no more!'

'Thou goest, and the world so bright
Is dark to me again,
And I shall listen to thy voice
And look for thee in vain;
But though my prayers for thee and thine,
Words are too weak to tell—
I cannot say farewell to thee,
I cannot say farewell!'

MISCELLANY

From the New-York Mirror

THE SECRET MARRIAGE.

A DANISH TRADITION.

It is many years since the following mysterious occurrence was talked of among different circles in Europe. It will probably always remain one of those inexplicable matters which baffle the ingenuity of the historian or the philosopher. I have translated it without embellishment

E. F. E.

At the lower end of the hamlet of Rorwig, on the Danish Island of Zealand or Zeeland, stood, in the autumn of a year in the first half of the last century, a house occupied by the priest of the village, a venerable and excellent man.—It was midnight; and the tenant of this humble dwelling was seated in his chamber, in his wooden chair, absorbed in pious contemplation. A lamp was burning upon the table, on which also lay some books the good father had been reading. The deep silence of the night was broken only by the distant murmuring of waves upon the sea-shore.

The door of the house was suddenly opened below, so simple and primitive in their customs were the inhabitants of this island, and so free were they from the suspicions engendered by greater civilization, that locks and bolts were things almost unknown. Each man's house was open to his neighbor by night as well as by day. And of all others the good old priest had least reason to dread aught from the presence of intruders. So that he felt no alarm if some surprise, at the prospect of a visit at this unwonted hour.

Heavy steps were heard ascending the stairs. The priest listened calmly; he expected a summons to the dying bed of some unhappy person to whom he was to render the last consolations of religion. His chamber door was pushed open, and two strangers closely wrapt in their mantles entered. One of them approached and addressed the priest abruptly—though with much courtesy.

'Father,' said he, 'you must go with us immediately. You are to perform a marriage ceremony; the bride and bridegroom are already in the church. This sum,' he added, showing a purse full of gold, 'will compensate you for the trouble, and for the surprise of being called upon thus unexpectedly.'

The priest made no reply, but gazed at the strangers who had something wild, and even startling in their aspect—in motionless astonishment. The stranger repeated his demand in a more urgent and imperative manner.—The good father began to represent as mildly as possible, that his duty permitted him not to enter upon so solemn a transaction without knowledge of the parties concerned, and without such formalities as the laws required.

The other stranger now came forward.—'You have the choice,' said he, in a rough and stern voice, 'to do our bidding and receive the offered reward, or to remain here, and have a bullet sent through your head.' So saying, he drew forth a pistol, and held it to the priest's forehead.

The minister in sacred things dared no longer hesitate. He signified his readiness to obey, and pale and silent attired himself as speedily as possible.

Both the intruders had spoken Danish: but with an accent that betrayed them as foreigners. The priest could not determine to what country they belonged. They left the house, followed by him, and in silence passed through the little village. The night was quite dark, the moon having already gone down. As they passed out of the hamlet, the old man observed with some surprise, that the church on an elevation at a considerable distance was illuminated. His companions moved on in silence over the flat sandy waste, so rapidly that he could with great difficulty keep pace with them, Before the church they stopped and bound a handkerchief over his eyes. The side-door, so well known to the priest opened creakingly, and he presently became aware of the presence of a number of other persons. A confused murmuring of voices filled the building; and near him he heard persons speaking with great earnestness in an unknown tongue—which—however, he supposed to be Russian. He stood for some moments bewildered and embarrassed. At length he felt his hand seized, and was pulled along with some force; presently he heard the people retire, leaving a clear space around him. The bandage was now taken from his eyes; he recognized his two conductors, and found himself standing at the altar. A row of large wax lights, in silver, candlesticks, stood upon the altar, and diffused light throughout the church. The company had retired into the side seats, leaving the middle aisle entirely empty. A large flat stone in the floor had been lifted out of its place, and leaned against one of the pillars. At some distance, in the dubious light, the priest thought he could distinguish the figure of a woman; the rest as far as he could see were men.

The profound silence, succeeding the mingled sound of many voices, was almost frightful. It continued some moments. At length a man rose, whose air and appearance denoted him of superior condition. He came quickly along the empty aisle his footsteps echoing through the church. He was of middle height, broad shouldered, and haughty in his carriage; his complexion was sallow and dark, his hair black and bushy, his features strongly marked and the lips compressed with an expression of pride and anger. The dark, heavy eyebrows overhung a pair of deep set, flashing black eyes. He wore a green coat, trimmed with gold lace—and with a brilliant star on the breast. The bride, who came forward, also, was dressed with care and magnificence. A blue robe, embroidered with silver, enclosed her slender form, and fell in rich folds to her feet. A tiara of jewels glittered upon her fair head. Her figure was symmetrical and graceful; and beauty of the highest order might be discerned in the delicate features, altered as they were by evident suffering. The cheeks were sunken and deadly pale; there was hardly a trace of life in the white and motionless lips—nor in the open, rigid blue eyes; and the relaxed arms hung nerveless by her side. She knelt mechanically at the altar; but her vacant look showed that some overpowering anguish or horror had crushed her mental faculties, and suspended within her even the full consciousness of what had passed.

For the first time the priest now observed an old woman with a most repulsive visage, dressed in a ridiculous variety of colors; her head covered with a red turban—who stood regarding the kneeling bride with angry and scornful gestures. A tall man, of powerful frame, had placed himself behind the bridegroom, looking before him with an expression full of gloomy and inflexible sternness.

The priest alarmed at the strange aspect of what he saw hesitated to begin the ceremony. But a fierce look from the bridegroom warned him that by so doing he perilled his own safety. Then he was at a loss to know if his language would be understood by those present. It seemed hardly probable; yet he ventured to make the trial, and collecting himself, asked of the bridegroom his name, and that of the lady.

'Neander—Feodora'—was the reply in a harsh tone.

The priest began to read the marriage ceremony. His voice faltered with emotion, and he was often obliged to repeat the words, so frequent were his errors; but no one seemed to notice his embarrassment, or testified impatience. This confirmed him in the opinion that the Danish language must be in great part, if not altogether unknown to them. It was therefore with great surprise, almost amounting to terror, when he asked the question—"Neander, wilt thou take Feodora to be thy lawful and wedded wife?"—that he heard the bridegroom answer "I will," and so loudly that it resounded through the whole church. The sound, like a sudden flash of lightning, seemed to arouse once more to life the unconscious bride. Her bosom heaved forth a deep breath, and a convulsive motion wissed across her marble features. The holy man turned towards her, and speaking in a stronger and more deliberate tone, so as to fix her attention, asked—"Wilt thou, Feodora take Neander for thy lawful wedded husband?" The bride started; a gleam of sense shot athwart her pallid face; her lips moved tremulously; light came in her eyes—her breast heaved again and she burst into an agony of tears. Yet amidst her weeping—a murmured "I will," might be heard in reply, uttered in a tone of such profound anguish as might have moved the hardest heart to pity.

Scarcely had she pronounced these words, when the bride sank backwards into the arms of the fantastically dressed old woman. Some minutes of silence ensued, at the end of which she resumed her kneeling posture, with her former aspect of insensibility, and the ceremony was finished. The bridegroom rose, and led his bride back to her former place; the tall man and the old woman followed. The conductors of the priest now come forward, bound his eyes again, and led him out of the church, re-entering themselves at the door which they closed after him.

It was some time before the good father could recover from his bewilderment, and assure himself that the strange scene in which he had been forced to take part, was not all a dream. But when he had torn the bandage from his eyes, and saw the lighted church, and heard again the murmur of voices, he was convinced that his senses had not deceived him. Anxious, if possible, to learn something that might explain the meaning of this singular, and evidently unhallowed procedure, he walked round the church to the opposite side, and concealed himself in a nook within the old wall. Here listening, he heard the sound of many voices increasing till it swelled into tumult. There was evidently strife, and fierce dispute. The priest thought he recognized the harsh voice of the bridegroom imperiously commanding silence. At last a shout was heard, then the faint cry of a female voice. There was again a pause; then a trampling to and fro with confused voices, that continued about a quarter of an hour. The lights were extinguished, and presently all came out of the church, and hastened together towards the sea side.

The old priest now crept from his hiding place and made haste back to the hamlet. Here he awakened one or two of his nearest neighbors, and acquainted them with the strange event, which had filled him with so much astonishment and alarm. So quiet was the ordinary life of these simple islanders, that they were seized with quite another sort of apprehension—which was that their beloved pastor had lost his reason. It was with no little difficulty that he could prevail on them to accompany him to the church.

Meanwhile the day had dawned; the sun rose from the ocean; and as the good father and his companions ascended the elevation on which the church stood, they plainly distinguished a ship under full sail, not more than a league from the land, and sailing northward. So novel and surprising a slight in this lonely region was enough to excite amazement and suspicion, and full belief was yielded to the narration of their pastor when they saw the side door of the church broken from its hinges. The stone which had been loosened and hastily replaced in the middle aisle was pointed out, and easily removed again by the aid of bars. It showed an opening into the vault, into which a dead body had been hastily thrust.—It was wrapped in a rich silken mantle. With almost frantic eagerness to learn the truth, the priest descended, and, assisted by the others, lifted the body out of the vault. Alas! his most fearful apprehensions were realized! It was the murdered bride! A leaden ball had penetrated her heart. The tiara of jewels had dissappeared from her brow. But the rigid look of agony, so intense that it had suspended even the sense of feeling, was gone also; a heavenly repose had settled on the marble countenance, and the pale lips were closed with a smile of peace.

The priest and his companions were dumb with horror at what they saw. With a common impulse they knelt by the side of the dead. After a few moments silence, the good old man lifted his hands, and poured forth an earnest prayer for the soul of the departed.

The holy man felt it his duty immediately to communicate what he had seen and heard to his spiritual superior, the Bishop of Zealand. Meanwhile, until he could receive intelligence from Copenhagen, he caused his friends to bind themselves with an oath to secrecy. The grave was covered, the stone replaced, and no one ventured to speak of the matter. After a time, a man, apparently of authority and rank, came to the island from the capital. He made most minute inquires respecting the transaction; examined the spot where the unfortunate unknown had been entombed, and praising the discretion that had hitherto induced silence, commanded the strictest secresy in future; threatening the severest punishment against any one who should dare to mention the occurrence.

ANOTHER EXTENSIVE DEFALCATION IN NEW YORK. The N. Y. Morning News of Wednesday, says: Within a few weeks past it has been discovered by the house of Holford, Bancker & Co., private bankers in Wall street, that the large amount of thirty-three thousand eight hundred and odd dollars of the funds in their hands, had been embezzled by their book-keeper and confidential clerk, by means of a regular system of fraudulent and false entries, and alterations of the books, carried on for several years. The young man, whose name we suppress on account of his afflicted family and fond and doating young wife and several small children, has not been the gainer by his nefarious transaction, for he does not possess now one single penny of the whole sum. A fatal passion for gaming first induced him to betray the trust of his employers. He lost, and his after larcenies were committed with the hope of being able, by a fortunate stroke at play, to retrieve his losses and refund the money. As is too often the case, instead of getting out of the mire, he continued to go deeper into it, until at last his crime was discovered. He has not yet been arrested, but the police know where to lay their hands upon him whenever he is wanted.

The Evening Post says that the sum of money embezzled, instead of being thirty-three thousand dollars, amounts to near eighty thousand dollars, altogether.

The "Evening Post" has an article upon political patronage, made up out of one in the Democratic Revew. The general Government controls the appointment of 14,000 postmasters, 14,000 deputies, 1000 mail contractors and agents, 2000 revenue and lighthouse officers—making in all 33,000 public dependents. This is exclusive of all the Army and Navy patronage.

THE PINE TREE.

We are glad to see that our friends at the head of Central St. are about restoring this ancient landmark at the junction of Central, Andover and Liberty streets that is, so far as they can do it by planting another tree. That old Pine Tree is associated in our minds by many early recollections—not that we ever saw it, for it was gone long before our time—but its name remained, and like that of the good man, it is better than "precious ointment."

"'Tis like the worthy man who gives
To goodness every day,
The fragrance of whose virtues lives
When he has passed away.

So it is with the old Pine Tree. Its memory is cherished,—embalmed in the hearts of our townsmen. It was an ancient landmark. It stood at a corner,—at one of the outposts of our village. Everybody who knew any thing, knew about the Pine Tree. It gave character and consequence to the neighborhood about it—travellers were directed by it—citizens venerated it and its fame became immortal!

Nearly half a century ago it fell to the earth and not a vestige of it remains, yet the young man seems familiar with it and the old man will direct the stranger "to turn to the left when he gets to the Pine Tree." To him it still has an existence—he sees it with his mind's eye as it was in his earlier days and unwittingly points the wayfarer to it as a guide to his path. It lingers in his memory a living thing as does the departed and beloved child to the bereft parent.

We have said we never saw the Pine Tree, but when in our boyhood, we had our designs of ambition and wished to stray into foreign parts and unknown regions we had as great a longing to see the Pine Tree as ever had Columbus to see the New World.—How did our little heart beat and our eyes dance when under the paternal guidance we had the promise of a ride to—aye—beyond the Pine Tree, and with what a feeling of sickness and disappointment were we told when we reached the spot, in answer to our anxious enquiries, that there was no Pine Tree! It was only a place,—a name—an immortal name without an owner! Still we cherish the name and perhaps it is engraven all the deeper on our memory for the disappointment. Not only the name, but the thing itself interests us. We have enquired about it of a venerable friend of ours who can remember back almost to the times of the Pilgrims. He describes it as a tall, dark looking object stretching out its long arms near its top and deprived of its branches below. An old settler of the forest totally unlike any other tree around it. Its age nobody knew—not even our venerable friend. No doubt it was a familiar object to those who came down to witness the execution of the witches in that dark delusion of 1692. It was probably seen by Higginson, Hugh Peters and perhaps by Gov. Endicott. It lived in the reigns of the thre Georges, Ann, and of William and Mary. Perhaps it might have sprung into existence in the time of James.

There is a more interesting historical association connected with this tree than any derived from its connection with crowned heads. It was almost at its root where in his childhood lived the Philosopher BOWDITCH. It was here he learnt his alphabet and where he used to look out at evening and "watch the moon and stars". The house is still standing. The place is holy. Would that we could see it consecrated by some monument appropriately representing the youthful Philosopher receiving his first lessons of knowledge and piety from maternal lips!

We have met with another case of posthumous fame similar to this of the Pine Tree. It is the description by a traveller in Scotland who was in search of the most northern point in that country always known as "John 'o Groat's house." Every body remembers the familiar lines of Robert Burns—

Hear land o'cakes an brither Scots
Frae Maidenkirk to John o' Groats'
If there's a hole in a' your coats
I rede ye tent it
A chield's amang ye takin notes
An faith, he'll prent it.

We will leave our lively traveller (Dr. M' Cullock) to relate his adventures in his own words.—

"I had almost forgotten that I was near John o' Groat's house, when I was reminded of it by a fisherman who wanted a shilling. When we came to John o' Groats house, behold, like the lover's tomb at Lyons, no house was there. Who was John o'Groat where did he live, what did he do, where was he born, married, or buried, when did he build the house, when was it pulled down, who had ever seen it, whose grandfathers and grandmothers, whose great-grandfathers and great-grand-mothers had ever seen it.—Nobody knew any thing, nobody had heard of any thing, except that a piece of green turf, as flat and as bare as the back of my hand, was John o'Groat's house. Why did they believe in John o'Groat; what did they believe of John o'Groat; who had told them of John o'Groat, and of John o'Groat's house; their godfathers and their godmothers. I congratulated myself that I had not come from London to see John o' Groat's house.

SUBLIME EXTRACT.—"It is a terrible thought, at an hour like this, to remember that nothing can be forgotten. I have somewhere read that not an oath is uttered that does not continue to vibrate through all time, in the wide-spreading currents of sound—not a prayer lisped, that its record is not also to be found stamped on the laws of nature by the indelible seal of the Almighty's will."—Cooper's Two Admirals.

DANVERS INDEPENDENT RAILROAD, No. II.

Boston, Oct. 1845.

Mr. Editor—In my former communication I alluded to the subject of vested rights; and since it is true, that to the notion entertained on this subject by the senate of Massachusetts, and the Railroad Committee of last year, you may attribute solely the defeat and rejection of your petition for a Railroad; I would ask your attention to a very brief consideration of the doctrine of said vested rights, and its practical operation.

And notwithstanding the entire doctrine has been repudiated and discarded by the highest judicial tribunal of our country.—notwithstanding our House of Representatives at its last session, presented a front against this exploded doctrine so unbroken, that I think there were but three, of its three hundred members who sustained it, as indicated by the action of the House on the Saxonville Railroad case; yet since it received the sanction of the Senate, and was sustained by an important joint committee of the legislature, we may be excused if we give it a passing consideration—congratulating ourselves as we proceed, that but one in a hundred of the popular branch of our government, and those if I mistake not, members of this same memorable Committee, are found prepared to sustain an old relic of the feudal ages of Britain, while the great balance of every name and party, go for the liberal policy of the age—for the principle of universal improvement, and republican equality.—Yes, the inveterate committee if not to a man, yet by a decided and stern majority are so in love with existing corporations, and so deeply imbued with the inviolability of vested rights, that they determine, that although Massachusetts has never before denied a request for a Railroad Charter, yet the time has come when legislation on this subject must cease; when all the avenues of improvement must be closed; when the rights of the entire people, must be sacrificed to the imaginary rights of some few corporations. That for instance, because a few individuals nine years ago, obtained a Charter—giving them no exclusive privileges—and built a Railroad from East Boston, to New Hampshire; consequently the people of Danvers, and other portions of the county of Essex, who are either not at all, or but very poorly accommodated by said road, (as I shall show hereafter) can never be allowed to have better accommodations—although the business of the place is diverted from its natural course, and turning in other directions in consequence of the necessity of those accomodations—and notwithstanding should their prayer be granted, they would build the road at their own expense, unlike the Eastern Railroad, asking no aid from the State.

Now the refusal of a prayer so essential to the interest of the petitioners as the one under consideration, appears so ungenerous, not to say absurd, that I propose to devote a very few moments to the argument, which is raised against the charter prayed for.

The Eastern Railroad Corporation, (for opposition comes from no other quarter,) contends that their Charter, is virtually a contract existing between them and the State; and that the chartering another company to construct a Railroad running into the county of Essex, would accommodate at least, a part of the same line of travel, and consequently violate their vested rights.

We are not at all disposed to deny that a valid contract exists between the State, and the Eastern Rail road Company but the extent, and construction of this contract, are not to be settled by the rules of interpretation adopted by the latter. In fact they are denied by the very terms of their Charter, and by the construction of the highest judicial tribunal known to the country. The acknowledged law, and true doctrine—without controversy—in all matters of public and common right are, that what is not expressly granted, is withheld, that although the Charter to the Eastern Railroad Company is a valid contract between the commonwealth and the proprietors of this road, yet this contract contains no express stipulation, which by any construction, deprives the State of the legal power to charter another road for the public convenience, and to facilitate the public intercourse, whenever the good of the community shall require it. And certainly where no agreement is expressed, none can be implied.

In England, where the true interest, and meaning of the Legislature, are left in doubt, those doubts must operate in favour of the State, and against the grantees.

And we are hardly prepared to admit, that the republicans of Massachusetts are less watchful of the rights of the people than the monarchy of Great Britain.

Again, where no express stipulation exists, the legitimate inference is, that the Legislature making the grant, never intended to disqualify the sovereign power for the discharge of one of its most important functions, to wit—that of providing at all times for the public necessities—for the unforseen exigencies which are constantly arising in an age of indefatigable improvement and untiring enterprise—never meant to paralyse legislative power that it could not pass all laws promotive of the general welfare of the community; and in the absence of all express agreement, the abridgment of this power cannot be set up by mere implication.

For the Legislature, by the very nature of their high calling, being the only active and practical agent of the sovereign power, and the chosen guardi ans of the highest interests of public concernment, are bound whenever the public good requires the existence of a certain law, to see to it that such law is enacted.

Further, having thus become the depository of this sovereign power, the Legislature is of necessity sole and only judge of the public exigencies and wants, and having no right delegated to them to shift this authority or responsibility to any other tribunal, they are necessarily sole judge in the case, and their judgment is binding and conclusive—irreversible and subject to no appeal.

Now if in the exercise of this indisputable prerogative, an enactment for the public welfare is consummated; or to speak more directly to the purpose, a Railroad charter is granted to the citizens of Danvers, for the public accommodation, which operates injuriously to individual or corporate property—for instance as a necessary and unavoidable consequence, diverting a portion of the travel, which otherwise would pass over the Eastern Railroad,—it is merely consequential, and they are not responsible. Since they have not by any act, revoked their charter—they have not seized upon their franchise—they have not annulled their grant, but have left them in the undisturbed possession of all their just and legal rights and privileges; not having even offered any inducements, which MUST of necessity, divert the travel; notwithstanding the effect of the act MAY be to diminish the income of their road; it is consequential, and the public faith is in no degree violated.

Any doctrine at variance with this, must prove fatal to every species of advancement. It would have furnished sufficient ground of argument in the mouth of the boatman, who sixty years ago plied his oar upon the ancient ferry between Boston and Charlestown; and thus would have effectually resisted the erection of a bridge across the Charles river; a work at the time not only esteemed a prodigy of mechanism, but of vast public utility. For the birth of the bridge, proved the death of the ferry notwithstanding the latter had enjoyed an uninterrupted existence for the long space of 145 years, under the special protection of the government.

So too the individual, who under the patronage of, and by virtue of agreement made with the government, earned his bread for many years by carrying the mail upon his back from place to place, (and many such there were in the infancy of the colonies,) cried out bitterly, that his vested rights were violated, by the incorporation of stage companies by the same government, and for the same purpose. And those stage companies in their turn, wept over the sacrifice of their vested rights to the powerful and resistless superiority of the Locomotive. Thus private emolument has been compelled (always reluctantly, and with the cry of vested rights,) to yield to the public good, until the whole doctrine has been exploded; and the liberal policy of the most liberal government—not satisfied with present attainments—grants no monopoly to any particular mode of business, or class of citizens; but as the natural and rightful guardians of the general welfare, proffers ample encouragement to all the arts, and equal rights to all the people.

PLANT TREES.

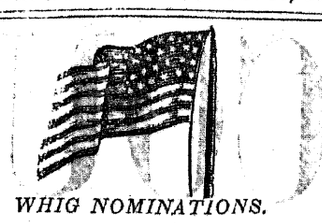
Every man who has a little land should plant trees. Besides the gratification it will afford him in having good fruit, he is a benefactor to after generations. There is a diversity of opinion as to the best season to transplant trees. From our own observation we are satisfied that all large sized trees do much better transplanted late in the fall than at any other time. Apples, Pears, Cherries and Plums usually do as well in the fall as Spring, unless the winter is unusualy severe. Kenrick in his orchardist says. "October and November, and immediately after the first hard frosts have arrested vegetation, is esteemed the best season of all for transplanting trees. When trees are transplanted in Autumn the earth becomes duly consolidated at their roots and they are ready to vegetate with the first advancement of Spring."

Mr. G. Newell a Nurseryman of Dorchester, thus writes on fall transplanting:—

"Persons wishing to set out trees will find the fall much the best time, than in the spring. In setting out trees in the fall it requires a shovel-full of coarse straw manure around each tree, with a few shovels-full of soil on top to prevent the heaving of the roots. Trees managed in this way will make much larger growths the coming season than if set out in the spring; the dry weather of the succeeding year will not affect them as those set out in spring. All young trees should receive the above protection for three or four years after being set out; the extra soil can be removed late in the spring of the year, leaving the manure around the trees. Experience tells me that by setting out trees in the fall, with the above precaution, I do not lose one half the trees that I do by setting out in the spring."

With these opinions we leave the subject to the discretion of the reader, merely remarking that in setting out trees, whether fall or spring, it is very essential, that your land should be thoroughly prepared and food sufficient for the trees incorporated with the soil to feed them ten years. Do this and you will never regret it.

D.



We find in the Kalamazoo (Mich.) Telegraph, the following description for a new threshing machine, lately introduced in that town:

It is driven up to the side of the stake, and geared to the horse-power. The bundles are passed through the threshing cylinder, and while the wheat is winnowed and screened, and passes into a box below, the straw is carried off on a revolving frame work, some distance from the machine, to be stacked for fodded Sixty bushels were cleared up in 55 minutes by the watch, and loaded in wagons from the box, fit for the mill or market.

We regret to learn from the Lowell Courier that RICHARD G. CURLEY, Esq., of that city died on Tuesday morning, of typhus and brain fever. His age was 32.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 18, 1845.

WHIG NOMINATIONS.

FOR GOVERNOR

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

JOHN REED.

WHIGS, ARE YOU READY?

A contest is to be maintained, which for complete victory, will require the whole power of the Whig party. The united forces of the Locofocos, Third party men, and Native Americans, are to be met.—Are you ready? Shall the struggle be met with coward and flinching hearts, or with the true, gallant Whig spirit? Shall the Whig party rouse itself?—Shall we determine to bring out our whole force, and rout the enemy? Whigs who are always ready at the rallying call, what say you?

It is particularly a time now for the country towns to exert themselves. Owing to the different parties in our great cities, there may be no election of Representatives in many of them, and the future character of the House and Senate probably, and perhaps an executive, will depend upon the delegation from the country towns. Let the Whigs in these towns in particular, see to it, then, that they do their duty; that the party is well organized. Let them exert themselves to bring every man to the polls. Whigs, urge upon your neighbors the necessity of action—strong, continued action. When victory is sure, the Whig party is often negligent; but when there is necessity for effort, the good and the true hearted come up to the contest, with glowing hearts and earnest zeal, and all is well. Now is the time for such effort. Rouse yourselves, Whigs, for the work. Labor and resolution will effect a complete victory over all the combined forces of the enemy. Will you do it and protect the noble policy of old Massachusetts from change, or will you sit by supinely and see it go into other hands?—Answer, Whigs, by your actions!

WHIG COUNTY CONVENTION.

We subjoin the proceedings of the Convention held at Ipswich, last week, and call the attention of our whig readers to the excellent Resolutions adopted by the meeting, and which do great credit to the chairman of the committee, J. C. PERKINS, Esq., from whose pen they emanated. We particularly commend the Resolve relating to Railroads which states in a concise form and in moderate and judicious language, the prevailing wishes of the great body of the people on this subject, —whose will is to be respected in the Senate Chamber as well as in the popular branch, at the approaching session of the Legislature.

With regard to the nomination of candidates for the Senate, the fact is not to be disguised, however we may regret it, that much dissatisfaction exists in this part of the County, at the renomination of one gentleman whose course last winter was supposed to have been adverse to the popular will on the Danvers Railroad petition. We are assured that many good whigs are determined to substitute another name instead of that of the obnoxious individual, but we hope no one will be induced to adopt the candidate of either of the other political parties. Let them rather adopt the name of a true, firm and consistent WHIG, ONE WHO HAS ALWAYS BEEN A WHIG, and one in whom they can repose the fullest confidence that neither their principles nor their interests will be exposed to betrayal. By adopting this course they will at least have the satisfaction of reflecting that they have thrown a full whig ticket, and not contributed to place power in the hands of our opponents.

F. W. CHOATE, Esq., of Beverly, was chosen Chairman pro tem., and J. S. HARRISON, of Salem, Secretary pro tem.

A Committee of five was chosen to report a list of Officers for the further organization of the Convention, who reported the following named gentlemen, and they were unanimously elected:

President—Hon. Lonson Nash, of Gloucester.

Vice Presidents—Caleb Hersey Esq., of Haverhill; Joshua Webster, Esq, of Lynn; F. W. Choate, Esq., of Beverly.

Secretaries—Edward W. Abbott, of Andover; J. S. Harrison. of Salem.

A committee was appointed to make the usual nominations for a County Committee, who reported the following named gentlemen, and they were accordingly elected;

WM PEIRCE, Andover
B. F. CORLISS, Gloucester.
JOHN HUSE, Newburyport.
J. H. DUNCAN, Haverhill.
ABRAHAM HAMMETT, Ipswich,
FITCH POOLE, Danvers.

And these gentlemen, with the Chairman of the several Town Committees, and the general Chairman appointed by the Legislative Convention, will constitute the County Committee.

The following resolutions, presented by J. C. Perkins, Esq. were adopted by the Convention:

1. Resolved, That we approve of a fixed and settled policy in reference to the encouragement of domestic labor; and we shall view with distrust and anxiety any attempt to disturb the tariff now in operation in our country. We earnestly hope that our senators and representatives in Congress will spare no efforts that can fairly be employed in opposing any inroads upon the present system of protection.

2. Resolved, That we view with regret and abhorrence all attempts to increase the slave power in this country; and we invite all good men to join us in devising and prosecuting all lawful and constitutional measures to break down the hideous and revolting institution of slavery.

3. Resolved, That we regard the attempt to annex Texas to this Union as a nefarious plot to extend the boundaries of slavery, and perpetuate the influence of the slave power. The whigs of Massachusetts have always consistently opposed the plan of annexing Texas as unconstitutional in reference to our government, and wicked in reference to human liberty; and if there be anything yet undone to complete the annexation, we will continue to oppose it by every means in our power.

4. Resolved, That we will encourage our senators and representatives in congress, in maintaining the noble stand they have taken in regard to Texas. We approve of their course, and will sustain them in any other legal and constitutional measure they may take, if there are any that can be taken, to defeat the consummation of the contemplated iniquity.

5. Resolved, That we have strong reasons to believe that we have been defrauded of our just rights and privileges by illegal practices in reference to the naturalization of foreign citizens, and by corrupt voting. We therefore call upon all good citizens, both natives and all those who have been legally naturalized to join us in the propagation of just sentiments upon this subject, and in the revision of the laws of naturalization, in order that we may secure the free and unbought votes of men who know enough of our free instiutions to love them and to preserve them from being crushed under the influence of voters just imported into our country, with the habits and sentiments which they have acquired and cherished under monarchical governments.

6. Resolved, That while the whig party are ready to do all that can be done, for the establishment of a safe and salutary principle regarding the laws of naturalization, no independent party for that purpose is necessary or expedient; but such party formation is at the present time productive only of evil, tending to divide the action of good men, as well upon this as upon other important principles.

7. Resolved, That we approve of a liberal policy in reference to the granting and extending railroad facilities because it is calculated to developе the industrial resources of the country, and to secure us an extensive internal trade.

8. Resolved, That we will not suffer the good ship Massachusetts, to become becalmed during the approaching election, knowing that to her a calm is perilous, while a tornado only serves to bring her under full and free whig action.

9. Resolved, That we heartily concur in the nomination of GEORGE N. BRIGGS and JOHN REED—tried, faithful, honest, and well approved, as they are—as the whig candidates for governor and lieutenant governor of this commonwealth; and will pursue every fair and honorable measure to secure their election.

ELIHU BURRITT. This gentleman has declined the nomination as candidate for Lt. Gov. tendered him by the Liberty party, and another name has been substituted. Mr. Burritt has of late devoted his energies mainly to the subject of Peace and it is believed that no other person is exerting greater influence in promoting pacific principles. It may have occurred to him at the time of declining the nomination that in case of his election and the subsequent decease of the Governor he would become Commander in Chief of the militia of the Commonwealth! a position in which he would feel particularly awkward. We notice by his last paper that he is about to return to the anvil and sledge hammer and wishes to be furnished with a cast off sword which he will take pleasure in beating into a pruning hook. This would be the literal fulfilment of a prophecy, the spirit of which has found in him a most able and consistent advocate.

MANUFACTURE OF HOSIERY.

It may not be known to all our readers, that the building in the western part of the town, long known as the 'Cotton Factory,' has been taken down and a larger and more convenient structure erected in its place which is to be immediately filled with knitting machinery of the newest invention. We understand that the proprietors have ordered forty power looms each of which when in full operation will be capable of knitting twenty-five yards a day, making one thousand yards for the whole number. These knitting looms will require the attention of only ten females who will thus be able to do as much knitting as would formerly have been done by a thousand of our grandames. We hope the enterprise of the proprietors, Messrs Woodbury & Co., will be crowned with abundant success.

☞ We call the attention of our readers to the communication on the first page of this paper, on Railroads. It is from the pen of one who was an ardent and active opponent of the doctrine of vested rights as long ago as the great struggle in the Legislature, on the charter of Warren Bridge, and on that occasion he was "in at the death." Time has confirmed in his mind all the opinions he had formed in that exciting discussion, and he has the ability to sustain them.

FALSE ALARMS OF FIRE.

The repeated instances of alarms of this kind that have occurred within a short time, demand attention and will unavoidably subject those who inconsiderately join in them, to exemplary punishment. Those who raised the alarm on Monday evening last, near the Baptist Meeting House, were distinctly seen and known; and should any similar event again occur, may be called to account for it. Such offences ought not to be passed over without notice.

QUICK WORK—We have seen a pair of Kip Boots this week, the upper leather of which was a fortnight before, a raw hide. In that brief space the leather was tanned and carried and the boots made and worn. This, we believe is a case of unprecedented despatch in the manufacture of leather. We may now look forward to the time when the skin of the patient ox that draws our burdens to day, will protect our feet from damps and cold to-morrow.

Travel between New York and Boston. The number of passengers by railroads and steamboats, between New York and Boston, in the month of September, not including those who went the Long Island route, was 19,314.

☞ The rioters who sent Cassius M. Clay's press and types off to Cincinnati have been tried and acquitted! Shameful!

GLORIOUS WHIG VICTORY IN PHILADELPHIA.

A Whig Mayor and City Council elected. The whigs of Philadelphia have achieved a glorious victory. They have carried their whole city ticket by majorities varying from four hundred to fifteen hundred. It was a hard contested battle, and such a result could hardly have been hoped for.—Let the whigs of the Old Bay State be up and doing, and not be behind their brethren of the "Keystone State," in the good work.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—As there is great dissatisfaction expressed in regard to one of the candidates for the Senate, nominated at the Whig Convention last week, the following ticket has been proposed by several of our whig citizens, and believing it will be more satisfactory, and receive the support of every consistent whig, I would beg room for its insertion in the Courier. EQUAL RIGHTS.

J. C. PERKINS, of Salem.
DENNIS CONDRY, of Newbury.
EDMUND KIMBALL, of Wenham.
HENRY POOR, of Danvers.
GEORGE HODGES, of Andover.

APPOINTMENT. We understand that Sheriff Sprague has appointed ANDREW TORR, Esq., of this town, one of his deputies.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor.—I noticed some remarks in your last paper, relative to two routes of Railroad to connect Danvers with Boston, "one to connect with the Eastern Railroad at Salem, and one commencing at Salem, to connect with the Maine extention Road at Malden," and you say "the town has, wisely for its own interest, inclined in favour of the latter." As far as the action of the town is concerned, the latest expression of its wishes is in favour of the former, by voting in town meeting in favour of a branch from Salem to North Danvers. This vote was passed by a larger meeting than that which expressed an opinion in favour of the Malden branch last winter, and the fact that this vote in favour of the branch from the Eastern Railroad was passed after an investigation of the merits of the two routes had been heard before the Legislature, it is but fair to say, that as far as the action of the town is concerned, the town is in favor of the branch from the Eastern Railroad to N. Danvers. As you Mr. Editor and some of your correspondents express a desire to adopt measures to promote the interests of the whole town, equally, I hope to witness in your correspondents a desire to investigate the comparative merits of each of the two roads with reference to the interests of the whole town. Thus far I have thought that some of your correspondents were unwilling to discuss this point but it appears to me to be a very proper subject for the consideration of the whole town.—For as the accommodation of Danvers is the great question to be decided, I hope we shall so direct our efforts as to secure the best accommodation to the whole town of Danvers. If I understand the two propositions as you state them, one of them would be a branch from Salem to North Danvers and the other a road from Salem through South Danvers to Malden, and the question then is, which of these two projects would best promote the interests of the whole town. If the Malden road would afford better accommodations to the south part of the town and afford no accommodations to the North part, we should consider whether the Branch from the Eastern Railroad to N. Danvers which would accommodate equally each part of the town, would not on the whole be better for the whole town. The advocates of the Malden road seem to base their claims upon the right to have an independent road for the special accommodation of their business to Boston, and if that is their object why not start direct from Danvers to Boston this would give them all the accommodation they ask.

E.

We have received the above communication from our correspondent E. in regard to some statements we made in our paper of last week, on the subject of a new Railroad. We stated, that the town has always inclined in favor of the Malden route. E. says that the latest expression of its wishes is in favor of the Eastern Railroad branch, and was passed by a larger meeting than that which expressed an opinion in favor of the Malden route last winter, and that consequently so far as the action of the town is concerned, it is in favor of the branch. We think the gentleman is mistaken in regard to the number who were in favor of the resolutions passed at that meeting, as it will be recollected that after the result of the vote to indefinitely postpone the subject was known, a large number left the meeting, and the resolutions were passed by a very small vote. There is this difference however, in the result of the two meetings. At the first in favor of the Malden route, the vote was unanimous in its favor. In the other in favor of the branch, which was held in the north part of the town, at a busy season of the year, and attended by but very few from the south part, there was a majority of but three in favor of the branch, and certainly no one supposed that the feelings of the town was indicated by that vote. And here we would merely state, that what we wrote, we did with a view to the real feelings of the town and not to the expression of either meeting. We know that the town entertained but one opinion on the subject last winter, and we have no reason to believe that there has been any material change of opinion since.

E. also takes the ground that the Malden project is not for the interest of the whole town. That as it is to start from Salem and go through South Danvers into Boston, the north part will get little or no benefit from it. If that were true and no continuation should be made to the north part of the town, we think there would be just and good ground for opposition by our friends of that place. But we have never supposed that the petitioners for that route intended to act in bad faith towards the north part. We never heard it intimated that such was the case, and if it is so, there is certainly great ground for dissatisfaction, but we should like to have evidence of it, before we can believe there is so much treachery intended.

We would inform E. that he is laboring under a mistake in supposing that our correspondent "Truth" and "T" are one and the same person. We have therefore omitted his remarks on that point.

GEORGIA.

The whigs are carrying all before them in Georgia. Returns from 71 counties give Crawford whig, a majority of 1872 for Governor. Last year Polk's majority in these counties was 1454. Whig gain thus far 3326. Crawford is undoubtedly elected Governor. Whig majority in the Legislature, 10.

What is a Fowl? The above question was asked us the other day. We supposed at first thought that it was easy to be answered, but in our attempt we found that all the meaning we could give was a fowl is a bird. But, said our friend, a bird is not necessarily a fowl. The distinction he made, was this, fowls take their young to their food, other birds take their food to their young. His science is correct, so far as we are able to judge, but we should like information from the knowing ones in regard to it. Is there any definition of the fowl in any works of ornithology? Can any one answer?

THANKSGIVING. Governor Briggs, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, has appointed Thursday, the 27th day of November, a day of general Thanksgiving in this State.

The Governor of New Hampshire has appointed the same day to be similarly observed in that State.

CASSIUS M. CLAY'S APPEAL.

The True American was revived on the 7th inst. The appeal is very long and powerful, and we hope will prove effective. We regret that our columns will not allow us to publish it entire.—We shall however publish a few extracts:—

Mr. Clay says that every one of the handbills issued by him, at the time of the mob, was dictated to an amanuensis, whilst his hands and head were continually bathed with cold water, to keep the fever down to a point below delirium. Every relative believed he would be murdered on Monday, and all but his wife and mother advised him to yield up the liberty of the press; but he says he preferred rather to die.

I am so far an Abolitionist as certain men named George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, and some other such 'fanatics,' who got together in 1776 and enunciated some very 'mad incendiary' doctrines. I followed up the same Washington who, some years after that memorable event declared that, so far as his vote could go towards the abolition of slavery it should never be wanting, The same Washington at some subsequent period, liberated all his slaves; I was 'fanatic' enough to follow his advice and example, and would have others do likewise, thinking it better to be just than rich.—On the other hand, I am opposed to the violation of law in any respect, either for the purpose of liberating a slave, or of murdering by mobs a loyal citizen. I look upon the rebels of the 18th, who bore death and arms in their hands in order to perpetuate slavery, as infinitely lower in crime and infamy than the 'incendiary sect,' if such there be, who would use similar means to liberate the slave.—God forbid that I or my countrymen should form an alliance with, or submit to, the despotism of either. Neither the Liberty party nor the Garrisonians hold any such murderous doctrines; they are monopolized by the 'respectable gentlemen' of the 18th of August. The Garrisonian Abolitionists are non-resistants; they hold, with O'Connell, that no revolution or change of government is worth a single drop of human blood. The Liberty party holds the doctrine put forth by their convention held at Cincinnati on the 11th day of June, 1845. They say of slavery, 'we believe that its removal can be effected peaceably, constitutionally, without real injury to any, with the greatest benefit to all.' So that if I was an Abolitionist in its broadest sense, there is no cause or excuse for any number of respectable gentlemen to come upon me and murder me, or trample upon the constitutional liberty of speech and of the press. The Whigs call me a Whig—I wrote to the Abolitionists on the 11th of June a letter published in the True American, where I call myself a Whig—the Abolitionists call me a Whig—and the Democrats call me a Whig; I hold the principles of the Whigs of '76, 'eternal resistance to tyrants'—and all the renegades, apostates and traitors in Kentucky shall not shake me from whatever measure I choose to advocate, of from whatever men I choose to ally myself.

* * * * * *

Not upon the slaves did I call. How could I? Is any man in Kentucky so base as to charge that I have held secret conference with the slaves?—No, not one! How then could I call upon the slaves, who could not read, one in a hundred?—With all my relations and kindred, slaveholders, many of them ministering in turn at my sick couch by day and by night—all to be involved in one common ruin—warring one county against a whole State—and I prostrate and unable to raise my head, to call upon the slaves to rally to the standard of civil war! I refrain from expressing the great indignation which such gross and monstrous calumny can not but generate in the coldest bosom. Go search my secret and public life from the cradle up, and tell the world by what steps I have gradually prepared myself for this last round of unmixed depravity! When have I stripped the poor—when played the sycophant to the powerful—where have I lied—what party betrayed—what friend deserted—when have I stolen or robbed—when did I counterfeit—whom have I secretly injured—in what penitentiaries have I served an apprenticeship to crime—whom have I secretly poisoned—whom have I openly murdered? Then, before this charge in the face of Kentucky and the world, I stand mute! Poor and friendless—broken in spirit and in hope—outlawed and exiled though I be, there is something yet remaining of what a man—a proud, just, honest man, should be; and I shall not stoop to plead not guilty not here, nor now!

* * * * * * * *

To the liberty of my country and of mankind, then, I dedicate myself and those whom I hold yet more dear—and for the purity of my motives, and the patriotism of my life—the past and the future—I "appeal to Kentucky and to the world."

More Trouble in Hollis St. Church. We learn from the Post that the Hollis St. Church has made a present to the Rev. John Pierpont of five thousand dollars, being a part of the fund of the church. The society has entered an injunction a gainst the proceedings, and the result will have to be determined in a court of law.

JOHN DIKE,

july 26 27 Water street, Salem.

To the Honorable County Commissioners for the county of Essex.

THE petition of the undersigned respectfully shows, that the public highway leading from Reading through Lynnfield, by the Hosiery Factory, in Danvers to Salem, is at present in a condition that does not reasonably accommodate the public in the uses required to be made of it. Particularly that part of said way, situate in the westerly part of the Town of Danvers, extending from near the boundary line of Lynnfield to King's corner, a distance of about three miles. Many parts of this way are so narrow, crooked and badly located, as to be incapable of being repaired, until essential alterations are made in the width and position of the same. Wherefore your petitioners ask that the same may be viewed and such alterations ordered as the public convenience demands. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

JAMES MARSH, and alii.

October, 1845.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ESSEX ss. Court of County Commissioners October Term, A. D. 1845.

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, That said petitioners give notice to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at Lynnfield Hotel in said Lynnfield, on Friday the twenty-first day of November next at ten o'clock, A. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said Petition and of this Order, thereon, in the Danvers Courier, a newspaper printed in Danvers, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said twenty-first day of November—And also by serving each of the Town Clerks of Lynnfield and Danvers with an attested copy of said Petition and this Order, thirty days at least, and by posting up an attested copy thereof in two public places in said town, fourteen days, at least, before the said twenty-first day of November, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and take such order in relation to the Prayer of said Petition, as by law they may be authorized to do.

E. SHILLABER, Clerk.

A true copy of Petition and Order thereon.

Attest, E. SHILLABER, Clerk.

LORRAINE'S PILLS.
All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by thing that appear to be farts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them finds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills!! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yours respectfully,

J. E. F. MARSH.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 1843

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills, we have sold all we had last. They have given very good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,

E. MASON.

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 1844

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtue, of Lorraine's Pills, I had no faith whatever, but I took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirely left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,

W. M. HALSTAL

Sir: I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

New England Office and General Depot, No 10 BrattleSquare, Boston.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent—all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

Respectfully, your ob't serv't,

JAMES CODSON, Esq.

Bath, Maine, July 16th, 1844,

A severe pain, in both sides cured!!

LOWELL, Mass., April 20th 1944.

Sir,—For the last few months I have been afflicted with a severe pain in both sides, at times so hard that I could scarcely get my breath. * * * * It is a pleasure to feel well,—but a much greater one to say that I was cured immediately upon taking one dose of Dr. LORRAINE'S PILLS. J. BROOKS.

A hacking cough constantly annoyed me!

BOSTON, Mass., June 1st; 1844

Sir,—In February last, I took a sudden cold, after which a hacking cough constantly annoyed me, and this, combined with my other maladies, rendered me truly miserable, as everybody told me that I was in a consumption. Since, I have taken LORRAINE'S PILLS and now every body tells me that I am well;—I fee as well as ever I did. J. E. S. McKEY.

Salem, April 12, 1845.

Fales' Cathartic, or Vegetable PURGATIVE LOZENGES.
NEW ENGLAND
TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfec ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee cape, and back board, are always kept on hand. As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

FAITH AND SCIENCE.

I had a dream which was not all a dream.—BYRON.

Methought that Night sat on her shadowy throne,
And o'er creation swayed her ebon wand;
The starry host were o'er the heavens bestrown,
And evening Cynthia led the radiant band.

Before me stood a mountain towering high—
Its lofty summit braved the blue abyss,
Where fleecy clouds came slowly sailing by
Like blessings floating from the world of bliss.

Upon its top appeared a shining form,
The vivid flash of whose far-darting eye
Seemed like the lightnings gleam amid the storm,
Whose piercing glance doth search immensity.

A robe of sapphire hue was round her thrown,
And o'er her head a golden wand she waved;
She looked the Queen of Air upon her throne,
And on her forehead, SCIENCE was engraved.

She broke the hush of Night, and thus began—
Her voice went bounding through the ether far—
"Who of Earth's noblest sons, though heaven-born, can Join me who govern Ocean, Earth, and Air?"

I dive beneath the dark Sea's briny springs,
And scan the pearls and corals of the deep,
Where ancient Night outspreads her raven wings,
And where Earth's proudest sons in silence sleep.

I scale the mountain's thunder-braving crest,
And tread in triumph its eternal snow,
Where man's weak footsteps never dare to rest,
Where earth's enammelled flowers do never grow.

I chain the Whirlwind to my chariot wheel,
And through the ether point the lightning's glance;
I rule the Ocean in her frenzied reel,
When liquid mountains to the thunder dance.

The rolling chords of yon refulgent Lyre,
High in the blue etherial concave hung,
At my command awake their notes of fire,
As if a new world into birth had sprung:

Yea more—enthroned upon my volant car,
I ride, swift as the slant auroral beam;
And wheel my throne upon the eternal stars,
To view the wonders of great Nature's frame.

Who is there then, that can with me compare—
What child of earth, or seraph of the skies—
The unrivalled Queen of Ocean, Earth, and Air?
Ah! none with me these daring heights can rise.

She ceased—when lo! a fulgid blaze of day
Burst through the vaulted sky upon my sight;
The azure curtains swiftly rolled away,
As Heaven unlocked her rosy gates of light.

And soon a cloud came floating from afar;
'Twas snowy white, but fringed with purple hue;
At length it paused self-balanced in the air,
And, o'er the mount, hung obvious to my view.

Then slowly melting into liquid air,
It left a form in sun-bright raiment drest;
Whose visage was like lightning, and her hair
Like snow in sun-shine, on the mountain's crest.

"Vain mortal-born!" said she in thunder's tone—
And as she spake, proud Science stood amazed—
The radiant lustre of her eye was gone,
Eclipsed as on FAITH's dazzling form she gazed.

"True, thou canst range through Nature's wide domain,
Pierce the dark caves 'neath Ocean's sable vest,
Ascend the mountain, bound with icy chains,
Whose sunless pillars on earth's centre rest.

True, the wide Universe is all thine own;
At thy decree the stars in order roll;
The Sun's bright chariot is thy burning throne,
And Nature yields to thee, from pole to pole.

But, canst thou rise above material things,
And gaze on thrones unutterably bright?
Canst thou in Heaven unwreath thy starry wings,
And soaring, bathe in uncreated light?

Ah, no! proud Science! here thy pinions fail,
And own themselves too weak to venture there;
But Faith, sublime, can rise "within the veil,"
Where strains melliffluous float on golden air.

She can dance beyond Time's narrow bound,
And when frail man resigns his fleeting breath,
Illume his passage o'er the "dark profound,"
Which ever rolls beneath the "Bridge of Death."

Faith tunes the harps of yonder blood-bought choir,
That make all Heaven vocal with their strain;
Who far outshine these glittering drops of fire
Which fling their splendors o'er the nightly plain.

Let Nature's ponderous pillars turn to dust,
And planets rush as from their orbits hurled;
Let Earth's prolific womb asunder burst,
And Chaos drive her ploughshare o'er the world:
Yet Faith can rise above their tumults wild,
And fix her stand fast by the Almighty's throne;
For know that she is gracious Heaven's own child—
This lower sphere is not her native zone."

YANKEE TRICKS.

REVOLUTIONARY INCIDENT.

Common consent is a very queer sponsor.—Common consent makes wits of stupidities; fools of wise men, gallants of Josephs, and rascals of honest individuals. Common consent stamped "Yankees,"—in their first days—as shrewd, incomparable tricksters, and common consent was pretty near right just at that time. Whether the Yankees are a match for opposition now, we leave to older and wiser heads to determine. We gained our independence by sheer force of arms. Now and then fortune would favor our side with a little extraordinary good event or circumstance, but not very frequently. It was fight twenty times where it was manœuvre successfully once. The English always on the look out for 'squalls' and 'Yankee tricks," not unfrequently deceive themselves in the most luaic rous manner.

In the month of May, 1814, Sir James Yoe, with a fleet of vessels, to the number of thirteen of various sizes, appeared off the mouth of the Genesee, threatening to annihilate Rochestere and destroy every improvement and person, in the vicinity. Great alarm was created by this. Messengers were despatched at once for aid—the people were aroused—like the fiery cross of Rhoderick Dhu the summons spread, and what, think ye, was the result? In Rochester there were just thirty-three people capable of bearing arms, and about half a dozen came in to help them. Truly a formidable army to repel an English fleet, and oppose a clever offshot of the British forces. The first thing that the little band of Americans did was to throw up a brest work—rude and slight—near the deep hollow, beside the Lower Falls.—The breast work was called Fort Bender.—They then hurried down the junction of the Genesee and Lake Outario, because there the enemy declared they would land. They left behind them two old men, with several small boys, to remove the women and children into the woods in case the British should land for the provisions, and the destruction of the bridge at Rochester.

The Rochester forces were commanded by Francis Brown and Elisha May, who acted as captains. Isaac W. Stone was appointed Major. The Americans were elegantly accoutred in various garments of shapes and makes almost antedeluvian. No two men were armed with the like weapons. Certainly they had all firearms; but they were not fashioned in the same style. The discipline of these troops was as curious as the costnme and equipments. But if they displayed an awkward front to the warlike eye, they also exhibited sagacity and courage—two qualities quite as much needed as a pretty uniform and good tactics. The enemy watched the on-shore procedings with considerable interest. They beheld, as they supposed, numerous bodies of militia marching to head quarters and preparing to give a warm reception. To deceive the English, the forty men marched and counter-marched incessantly through the woods, from point to point, in such a manner as to convince the soldiers in the vessels that the whole country was roused and preparing for action. The English tho't it was high time to be cautious, and therefore sent an officer with a flag of truce, to the shore. One of the militia captains, with ten of the best looking and most soldier-like men, were sent to meet the officer. The men carried their arms as upright as might be consistent with their plan of being ready for action, by keeping hold of the triggers.

The British officer was astonished. He looked all kinds of things, utterable and unutterable and with a swelling crest said:—

"Sir, do you receive a flag of truce, under arms and with cocked triggers too?"

"Excuse me I beg," said the American captain, "we are not soldiers, only back-woodsmen, and know more about felling timber and following the plow than of military tactics;" saying which the American, to rectify his first error, ordered his men to ground arms!

This, of course still more astonished the Britton. He looked indignant—then suspicious—than a little terrified—and at last delivered a brief message in haste, and incontinently sought the fleet again. He declared that the ignorance of tactic was feigned to draw the commodore into some snare, and informed those who sent him that some "Yankee trick" was under process of development.

The British wanted the spoils, but they were too suspicious to attempt a landing, if by making a compromise, they would secure a part of them. Accordingly, another officer, with another flag of truce, was sent to parley. Cap. Francis Brown was this time deputed to receive the officer. Brown took a guard with him.

The British officer looked suspiciously upon Brown and the guard. He conversed with the utmost caution, and walked as though he expected either to find a trap door, or a springing mine, beneath his feet. After spending a short time in conversation, the officer suddenly discovered that the width and clumsy aspect of Captain Brown's garments betokened something not exactly right. He thought that Brown was a regular officer of the American army, and that his regimentals were masked, for some stratagem, by clumsy and hastily made overcloth. Impressed with this idea, the Britton suddenly grasped Brown's pantaloons by the knee, exclaiming half jocosely, while he handled the cloth most firmly, "What a pity such excellent cloth should be spoiled by a bungling tailor."

Brown smelt out the object of the officer's movement, and quick-witted, he carelessly replied—

"Oh! I was this morning prevented from dressing fashionably by my haste to meet and salute distinguished visitors."

The officer then made a proposition that if the provisions and stores which might be in and about Rochester, were delivered up, Sir James Yoe, would spare the settlement around.

"Will you accept and comply with the offer?" inquired the bearer of the flag of truce.

"Blood knee deep first!" replied F. Brown, with startling emphasis.

While all this parley—the last clause of which was enough to affright the oldest and toughest soldier—an American officer with his staff returning from the Niagara frontier, was accidentally seen passing from one wooded point to another. This, with the very curious circumstances, confirmed the Brittons in the belief that a large American army was collected, and that Yankee officers shamed ignorance for the purpose of enticing them on shore to be slaughtered and anhihilated. They had not proofs exactly as strong as holy writ, but they were irresolute, undecided, and frightened, and were thus half conquered. No sooner had the flag of truce got back to the fleet, than a shower of bombs and balls was sent from each vessel. The attack was immediately acknowledged, with great spirit. How!—Why a rusty old six pounder had been mounted on a log and scoured up for the occasion, and as soon as it could be charged it was "let off" on the thirteen English vessels. A few hours were spent in this manner and Sir James Yoe, assured that he could not be in safety in that vicinity, (and with one of his vessels badly shattered by the aforesaid log-mounted six-pounder,) run down to Pouletteyville, about twenty miles eastward of Genesee river. Where they learned how thirty-eight or forty green militia men had beaten off and prevented a large British fleet from landing, by a very successfully Yankee trick.

As soon as the keen edge of mortification was worn off, Sir James and his people laughed heartily at the stratagem and its result. It was a noble Yankee trick that.

COMMUNICATION.

Mr. Editor—I am reluctantly compelled to make a brief exposition of the mis-statements, and false impressions given to the public in the last communication of your correspondent E. I had hoped that I should have been spared the trouble and the public would have been exempted from the infliction of another correspondence which must of necessity be but little more than a repetition of what has already been said, inasmuch as the gentleman at the Plains had but little to say when he began this controversy, and that little has been most dilligently applied through all his communications to sustain the position he uncautiously assumed upon this question. In my last communication I stated in reference to the instructions of the town to their Representatives upon the Railroad question, which I had in a previous article most clearly proved to have been given, that Mr. E. had passed them in silence. In reply the gentleman at the Plains says "I stated in my last that in all the array of evidence presented by the N. D. R. not one word was said about instructing the Danvers Representatives, and for the very good reason that they were chosen to look after the interests of the town &c" is this says he "passing them in silence?" I shall make no comment upon this answer, but leave those of the public who are sufficiently interest in this controversy to read the articles already published, to refer to my communication under dates Sept 6. and Sept 13. where it was shown that the course taken by the Representatives of the town upon the Railroad question last spring was in perfect union with the unanimous wish of the town legally expressed at a meeting of the citizens assembled for that purpose. It will be seen that in answer to all the doings of the town as well as the action of the town's committee published in that article, and the reasons and arguments most justly and fairly drawn from them, that your correspondent E. has made but a weak defence in the statement above referred to. By this statement he denies being silent upon this matter, but I think his denial to be less creditable to him than his silence. Your correspondent E. also says, that when he wrote these petitions he did not mean them for instructions and neither did the town mean them as such although they were passed by them with perfect unanimity. The matter is this. The citizens of the town sent to the Legislature petitions in which were embodied all their views, feelings and wishes upon the subject of Railroads. And for what purpose pray did they send them? Was it not for the purpose of instructing that body in reference to the wants of the town expressed in the prayer of these petitions? Could there have been an individual in town weak enough to have supposed that after these petitions were put into the hands of the Representatives of the town, written as they were for the specific purpose operating upon the minds of the members of the Legislature, it was necessary to give to the Representatives of the town particular instructions how to act in reference to them? They were to act for the interests of the town, and they knew what those particular interests were, for the town had made them manifest by incorporating them into petitions and putting those petitions into their hands.

Mr. E. also says the town chose nine persons to adopt such measures to advance the interests of the town as they might think proper. Sir, I know they did, and the duty of this Committee was to have the petition of Mr. Pingree and his associates so managed before the Committee of the Legislature as to obtain from them a bill in favor of their petition; and while this Committee thus acted, they acted in good faith with their instructions.—But did not Mr. E. a member of this Committee act in direct violation of there instructions when he used his influence in favor of the Eastern Railroad bill when from all he was allowed to know upon the subject the town were opposed to it?—Mr. E. further says, that I said "that the branch from the Eastern Railroad was the best thing we could have, and the only thing we should get, &c." This gentleman has once before importuned me upon this point, and I should have answered him then had I supposed he had any other purpose in view but to make a long article for your paper.—I wish then, the gentlemen at the Plains to understand that I was once favorably disposed to a branch from the Eastern Railroad. And there is not a member of this Committee to my knowledge who did not know it, yet not one for them for a moment doubted that I should sacrifice my own opinion to the unanimous opinion of my constituents, and the gentleman at the Plains not excepted. As evidence that Mr. E. knew that I should oppose the Eastern Railroad bill is found in the fact that he called at the house where my colleague and myself were staying, on the evening previous to the action of the bill before the Legislature and obtained a conference with us upon this subject; and endeavored to influence our minds in favor of the Eastern Railroad bill. He then knew conclusively that although I had been in favor of this branch that I should act for what I believed to be for the interests of the town and oppose it. Mr. E. repeats another statement which he made in a previous communication to this effect, viz: that some one of the Committee saw me soon after the court rose and asked me how I came to oppose the Eastern Railroad bill, and that I stated, that the South Parish folks were all opposed to it and I took this course to prevent a quarrel between the North and South Parishes. I at once pronounce this an unqualified falsehood. The gentleman at the Plains may have been told so, but I cannot help this. He can only alter its parentage by giving to the public the name of that individual.

To show the extreme improbability of such a statement, I need only to say that last spring I knew of only four persons in the North part of the town and not more than two or three, in the South part who were in favor of the Eastern Railroad branch. How then could a quarrel be expected should the bill be stopped? Only by considering the gentleman at the Plains the "North Parish," and upon these grounds I anticipated a quarrel but I shall strive hard to keep out of one.

I had expected when this controversy commenced that such a course would be maintained by my opponent as would at least be honourable to both parties by keeping such parts in sight as might in some degree justify the different views we had entertained in this matter, and although on a question of this nature it could not be expected that both sides could be supported by facts, yet I think that some reasons at least might have been expected from my opponent for a difference of opinion with me upon this question, in which I think he would have had more justification from the public in making the onslaught than will now be granted him. Mr. E.'s last article shows that statements and stories are all that is left. Truly "the mountain hath labored and brought forth a mouse."—I hope this gentleman will acknowledge my best wishes for his good health after his past labor and should he again conceive another plan by which his family of interests might be increased, I hope his pains will be rewarded by a more respectable progeny.

Did I think the public would be benefitted by a further discussion of this question, I would not promise you that I have done. F.

MISCELLANY

POULTRY.

There are many good house wives that can roast or boil a chicken, turkey or goose to admiration, that do not understand the science of determining the age of the fowls they are to cook, and hence serious mistakes at times occur; part of the chicken-pie, or one of the brace of roasted fowls is over-done, while the other is utterly unfit to be sent to the table. Those who undertake to cook a pullet with its grandmother, will probably be unsuccessfully in producing a dish to their satisfaction!

The breast bone of a fowl is one of the surest indications of its age. If it is soft, and yields easily to a pressure, the fowl is young; if it is hard and inflexible, whatever may be the quality of the bird in other respects, time will be required to cook it.

Much may also be known by means of the toes and feet—those of the young being usually perfect and flexible, the older ones rarely have their feet in that state. In young geese the cavity under the wings is very tender, the web between the toes thin, and partially transparent. If the head of a pin is passed along the beast or sides, the skin will readily tear, like fine paper under a knife.

ADVANCE OF RAILWAY SCIENCE. The progress of railway enterprise is not only vast but magnificent—vast in its plans, and magnificent in its results—leaping over all obstacles, joining worlds with worlds almost, and seeming likely through the remarkable desire for increased locomotion which is not unfrequently exhibited to 'put a girdle round about the earth in forty minutes.' About thirty years ago it was doubted whether locomotives could run at all upon iron railways: twenty years ago the idea of their moving at a greater speed than twenty miles in the hour was scoffed at as chimerical; fifteen years ago the unexpected rate of thirty miles an hour was considered a wonder which no effort of practical science could surpass; and now a speed of nearly fifty miles an hour is in daily use, while the rate of a mile per minute promised, and, in some special instances, has actually been exceeded. It is singular that the three great feats accomplished by practicle science in our own time, viz, lighting by gas, crossing the Atlantic by steam in ten days, and rapid traveling by the same motive power on railways, have, one and all, been denounced as utterly impracticable by 'philosophers,' who actually knew nothing of the subjects upon which they theorised. Correspondence of the Danvers Courier.

West Point, June 184

Mr. Editor—I now intend to fulfil my prou to give you some account of this celebrated m tary post and the Academy for the instruction Cadets preparatory to holding commissions in Army. My limits will oblige me to pass over many historic associations connected with famous fortification, and also any descriptio the beautiful and romantic scenery of the place I consider myself fortunate in being here at time, as the Cadets are in camp and there many distinguished visitors here. The very ni of my arrival, the Cadets got up a display of works in honor of the Secretary of War, and also had what is here technically called a "Sta which is a sort of military dance around a ci of lights on the grass. The effect of this da in such a ball room, and with the fine musi the Cadet Band, was truly beautiful to a looker and the young soldiers seemed to enjoy it high

As it is only occasionally that the Cadets have these pastimes, they enjoy such seasons w the greater relish, and however pleasing and mantic the life they lead may appear to a mere server, I became well satisfied by conversing w some of them, that after the novelty was ov their duty was irksome enough. There is no publicanism in a military camp. In their subj tion to authority, their various restrictions and et, the Cadets approach almost to the condition prison convicts. Their food is as coarse, their as hard, and their confinement almost as str while their exposure to the elements is greater Although a Cadet may look into an almanac a predict with almost absolute certainty just wh he is to eat at breakfast, dinner and supper, for ery day in the year, and look forward with lon ing appetite for the fortunate periods when he have the luxury of molasses with his bread, a although he is obliged to stand guard at night posed to damps and rains, or if in his tent he wakes and finds himself in a puddle of water, a obliged to wring out his clothes before he can them on--notwithstanding all this they are pr ably more healthy than an equal number of pup in any College in the country. I have been t that greater proficiency especially in Math em ics is required here than at any literary institut in the Union. There seems to be a strange inco gruity in witnessing these ambitious and intelle ual young men in military uniform, alternat carrying a musket, and studying French; dra ging a cannon, and grappling with a mathema cal problem which is to be demonstrated to lear ed professors in regimentals. I have obtain from one of the Cadets an account of a day's ro tine while in barracks which will show how th time is occupied. My informant is a new-com or Freshman as he would be called in College, they are here called "Plebes."

About five o'clock in the morning they hear t bang! of the big gun on the plain, the signal beating reveille which commences at the end the parade ground, and the drummers march wards the barracks, passing around the South a marching into the end of the North Barracks. The Cadets jump up, scramble on their clothe arm themselves and hurry down to their compa parade ground before the drums cease beatin where the roll is called and if a Cadet is behi the time, he is marked in the conduct roll for thr demerits and reported at Washington, which r port is sent to his friends every month, with su others as he may have committed. They now back to their rooms, fold up their beds and p their room in order for inspection. They th study until seven, which is bre kfast time. T Surgeon's call is beat at six and a half, when tho who complain of sickness are examined by a me ical officer. The batalion marches to the Mc hall to breakfast, in column of platoons, left front going, right in front returning. The remai der of the hour until eight o'clock they may go the Post Office and at that hour there is a ca parade of sections who march to their recitati under command of a "squad marcher," to the Ac ademic building where they recite and demonsta on the black board about an hour and a half an then march back to their rooms to study Frenc until dinner at one. There is a class parade gain at two, to march to the hall to recite French back to barracks at three, and study Mathematic until four and a half, when the drum beats fo drill. The companies are now formed and drille by batalion until five and a half. They then r turn to quarters and are at liberty till dress parad at six o'clock, and that being over they march supper. This over they have another half hou and are called to quarters. Tattoo commence beating at nine and a half, and the lights are ex tinguished at ten. Thus ends the day, and it almost the exact account of every day of the year

The whole course is one of hard application an severe trial, but nothing is required which ma not be performed. The regulations are hard an strict, and the delinquencies of the new Cadets ar read at every evening parade and some of them get from two to five reports a day, and if the num ber reaches two hundred in the year, the offende is discharged. Some of the offences count eigh or ten demerits and less for lesser offences, the most trivial counting but one. It is curious to hear the misdemeanors read out at parade such a the following—"Cadet A., coat unbuttoned out o quarters:" Cadet B., swinging the arms in march ing:" "Cadet C.'s cap not hung up in quarters:" "Cadet D., laughing in ranks:" and such othe trivial things, but they are supposed to be necessa ry to complete the soldier. The Cadets frequent ly play mischievous pranks with the "Plebes," and the green ones are subject to all kinds o practical jokes, some of them of rather a rough character. One of the most innocent kind, but which affords as much mirth as any to the older ones, is, to have the new-comers arrested and tried by a Court Martial. He is taken with all due form and arraigned before the awful tribunal and tried for some such offence as we have stated, when, his case being made out by the Judge Advocate to be of the most heinous kind, the mock trial ending by a heavy penalty which of course is never exacted,

Since I have been here I have had the honor of an introduction to Gen. Scott. He is a noble specimen of a man, having the most commanding form I ever saw. He would be a capital study for a sculptor designing a statue. He is accompanied by his family and a large Newfoundland dog named 'Rolla,' who is black as jet, and is a pet of the youngest child about six years old.—Gen. S. is much interested in the Academy and always calls the Cadets his "boys," and they all seem not only to respect but love him.

Perhaps the most severe duty of the Cadets is the Artillery drill, especially in warm weather.—I saw a drill of this kind where only four or five boys were attached to a cannon which they had to drag back and forth, load and fire until their close stoned coats were completely saturated with perspiration, and the poor fellows panting with heat. I also saw the Dragoon drill, and more perfect equestrians are not often seen. They accomplish feats of dexterity surpassing any circus riders I ever saw—riding like lightning, the horses being animals of the largest and most fiery kind. One of their feats consists in riding furiously past a post, the height of a man, with a ball on the top of it the size of a man's head. The Dragoon strikes off the ball with his sword, striking neither the post nor the ball only enough to pass between them. Two of the Cadets were thrown from their horses while I was looking at them, and escaped almost by a miracle from being killed. Such accidents are frequent and almost always happen from the breaking of the saddle girth. The exhibition of fencing by sword exercise looked too dangerous to be pleasant to witness. The Cadets also learn to be expert in firing bomb shells. These destructive missiles are thrown at a target in the river, and the young soldier is required to apply his scientific knowledge to their use. He must calculate the weight of the shell, the force and quantity of powder and the distance of the object, and after all this, the elevation of the bomb to make such a curve or orbit as shall cast the shell on the deck of a vessel. It is wonderful to see with what exactness they are enabled to toss these formidable balls into the desired part of the river.

Yours &c.

WHIG NOMINATIONS.

FOR GOVERNOR

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

JOHN REED.

THE NATIVE AMERICAN PARTY.

It is a matter of extreme regret, that many who have the welfare of our free institutions at heart, and who have long seen cause for apprehension in the frauds which have been practised on the ballot box, through the instrumentality of the great mass of unnaturalized foreigners in our large cities, should pursue the course they do to eradicate the evil. We believe them to be honest, sincere men, but that in the heat of excitement they have overlooked the true course to be pursued.

We would ask such persons, if there are any among our readers, what need there is of organizing a new party to effect the proposed change? It is a notorious fact, that the Whig party of the country has invariably been a great, and the only sufferer by the frauds which have been practised. The Whig party has for a long time, and particularly since the vast accumulation of fraud within the last few years, done any and every thing they could to put a stop to it. They have, when in power in the large cities, passed Registry laws, and taken every precaution they could to prevent impositions by the other party in getting illegal votes, and the other party on the other hand, has as invariably abolished those laws when they resumed the ascendancy, and thrown wide open the doors for abuse and corruption. This being the case, can there be anything gained for the cause, by organizing into a separate party? We say, certainly not. The only effect it can have will be to divide the friends of the measure. Such new party may and will draw many honest men from the Whig party, but will it draw any from the Democratic party? We say, no, because the foreign vote has ever been the support of that party. Let Whigs weigh the matter well. They are too apt to act impulsively, and when too late, regret the course they have taken. If there shall ever be a time when the Whig party falters in its attempts to correct the abuses of the ballot box, or shall cease to protest against the elective franchise being used with impunity by the sea of foreign immigration which is inundating our country, then, and not till then let a Native American party be organized. Whigs! see to it that in this matter you act with prudence and discretion.

MEMPHIS CONVENTION. A convention of the Southern and Western States is to meet at Memphis, Tennesee, on the 12th of November. It is to be a meeting irrespective of parties, to consider the interests of those two important sections of our country, and to concert plans for their advancement. It will be promotive of good, we trust, as are all gatherings which bring together people of different sections and interests to consult for the general good. It is a fault with our people that they are too selfish, and are influenced almost entirely by sectional considerations. Anything which has the tendency to do away with this is deserving of attention. Mr. Calhoun will probably be there as a delegate from South Carolina, and Henry Clay to represent the interests of Kentucky.—It will be an important meeting and we look forward to the result with interest.

ECCLESIASTICAL. We understand, says the Traveller, that the Maverick Church, at East Boston, has given a call to the Rev. J. P. Cleveland, of Cincinnati.

EXAMINATION OF SCHOOLS IN BOSTON.

This celebrated document has at length appeared to enlighten the world. We have looked over its pages with much interest. It certainly presents many points for admiration and astonishment. It probably gives a true representation of the acquirements of the pupils, without any varnishing or false colouring in their favor. On the contrary, it seems rather apparent, from the course of examination adopted by the committee, that they were not particularly desirous of aiding the Scholars in appearing well. Many of the questions proposed were not of a character to be readily and correctly answered by children. We doubt, if half of the men liberally educated would have been able to answer all these questions at first thought, wtthout investigation. We think the committee were in error in proposing questions, that the scholars had not had a fair opportunity to be familiar with. Still there is much to be learned from this Report; and we hope our Committees and teachers will avail themselves of the instruction it affords,—avoiding the errors into which the Committee may have fallen. *

BELGIAN RAILWAYS. A recent publication by How gives interesting information of the management of the Belgian railways. The surface of the country is very level, consequently there is less expense in their construction than in most other countries. They are constructed with as little expense as possible, and the carriages used are small and light and not constructed at such enormous expense as most of those on our roads. The result of this is that Belgium is completely intersected with Railroads which carry passengers at less than half the price charged in this country or England. We quote from the author.

"The fares of the third class carriages are, indeed, so low, that the laboring population of the country are able to pay for a journey to market without inconvenience even from their small wages. The cost of the Belgian lines, including the compensation for land and all other charges, was £16,000 per mile; the cost of the London and Birmingham line was £48,000 per mile. We sincerely wish that our own railways could be conducted with as much prudence and economy. The unreasonable demands of the public for great speed and for greater accommodation than they have ever received, previous to the establishing of railways, in any other public conveyance, has led to an enormous outlay, which places railway travelling beyond the reach of the laboring classes, unless they submit to all the hardships and inconvenience which are designedly imposed on those who travel by the cheap trains."

EDUCATION IN VIRGINIA. Great efforts are being made in Virginia, for the cause of Education, and a convention of its friends is soon to be held, to discuss the matter, and put in operation plans for the general education of the people. We are sorry to say that there are 60,000 persons in Virginia who cannot read or write, while in the free state of Connecticut, there are but 500 laboring under the same disadvantage.—What a contrast! It shows the different tendencies of the free and the slave spirit, in a portentous light. Let Virginia free her slaves, and the vigor and new energy which will be infused into her citizens, will urge them with a power not to be resisted, to advance the ntelligence of all within her borders, and the 'President making state' will resume her pristine glory and power.

Mexican Tariff. The new tariff it is expected will be published next month, and will go into operation in four or six months. The duty will be considerably decreased on wine, iron, steel and brandy; little on linen, and probably not at all on cotton goods.

Winter. There has been a flurry of snow at Buffalo, N. Y.

☞It is with pleasure that we invite the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Mr. Shute, in another column. Those persons visiting the city and who are in want of any article in the Hat, Cap and Fur line, should not fail to examine his extensive stock before purchasing elsewhere. Ladies in want of a beautiful Muff for the approaching cold season, will find the desired article at No, 173 Washington St. Boston, and they can obtain it at a fair price.

REDUCTION OF THE TARIFF. There seems to be no doubt but the adminis tration is determined to tamper with the Tariff during the next session of Congress. What plan will be adopted in the reduction, is not yet certain, but it is most probable an undiscriminating ad valorem duty will be laid, which will operate most unjustly and ruinously for the mechanical interests of the North and West. The future popularity of the dominant party depends in a good measure upon the course they take upon this question. We think the most popular course would be to "let well enough alone," although brought about by Whig legislation.

NEW ORLEANS. The city has never been more healthy, it is said, than during the present season.—Out of a population of more than 100,000, the deaths have been but 56 per week. In 1840 there were 19 persons living in New Orleans above 100 years of age.

Potatoes in the Provinces. It is thought there will not be so much of a failure of the potato crop in the British provinces, as was anticipated.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROADS AND CANALS. The amount of tolls received on the Pennsylvania Rail roads and Canals, up to September first, show an increase of $4,750 over the corresponding period of last year, and $136,680, 30 over 1843.

☞Independent Railroad, No. 3, will appear in our next.

ELECTION IN OHIO.

The returns from Ohio show that that State is Whig all over. It is ascertained that the Senate will stand 21 whig to 14 loco. Whig majority 7.

So far as definite returns are received for the House, the Whigs have elected 38 members and the Locos only 15. The House consists of 70 members. The Whigs will elect at least 10 more. and, if we concede all the rest to the locos, the House will stand 48 Whig to 22 Loco. Whig majority 26.

☞The result of the election in Florida, shows a large Whig gain since the election in May last, and it is believed a Whig member of Congress has been chosen.

Premium for Children.—At the recent agricultural fair in Burlington Vermont, Mr. L. Chase presented for premium three pretty female children, two and a half years old, born at a birth! The committee on Household Manufactures awarded him $14—which was voluntarily contributed by the old bachelors present, who said they considered him a legitimate object of charity, and were glad to be let off so cheaply.

Real Estate, sold at Auction, at the New Mills, by Edward Stimson Oct 20th:

The homestead of the late Phebe Smith, containing 139 rods, on High street was purchased by William Alley for six hundred and seventy dollars. 7 1-4 acres on Ash st. were purchased by John Grout Esq., at one hundred dollars per acre.

☞The honorary degree of A. M. was conferred on Rev. Joseph Banvard, of Salem, at the recent commencement of Columbian College, at Washington, D. C.

SALEM POST OFFICE. The gross receipts at the Salem Post Office, for the quarter ending Sept 30, 1844, under the old law, were $1,411 33. The gross receipts for quarter ending Sept 30, 1845, under the new law, were $1,213 78—difference, $197 55, or falling off of 13 9-10 per cent. About the sum of $130 00 of this diminution is on newspapers, leaving less than seventy dollars difference in letters! This is doing well for the first year of the reform.—Salem Reg.

The result of the New Postage Law in this town has been very different, the amount of the receipts having diminished nearly one half.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—Please insert in your paper the following extracts from the Mass. Ploughman of last week. As the suggestions seem more especially intended for this town, I think you will confer a favor by publishing them, and thus awaken the attention of the citizens to the importance of the approachihg election. R.

You are reminded that George Wheatland of Salem, and Edmund Kimball of Wenham both voted last winter against granting liberty to new Companies to choose their own route to Boston, Both Senators voted in subserviency to the wishes of the old Railroad Companies to prevent the granting of new charters. Both these Senators voted to refuse a charter to the town of Framingham, Wayland, and Weston after it was conceded by the Boston and Worcester Company, that such a grant would be no violation of their own charter.

We now see that these same men are at the head of the list of candidates for Senators from your county. Should they be re-elected and act consistently with their former course they must refuse all future grants unless the applicants first obtain the consent of the old chartered Companies!

We have before us the record of the votes of these individuals. There is no mistake in the matter. They voted against the granting of the petitions of these three towns, though the petitioners made out so clear a case that after long arguments pro and con in the Honse, that body decided almost unanimously in its favor—only three members voted against it.

We ask the good people of Danvers whether the Eastern Railroad Company will not expect in turn the aid of the other Companies in case you ask for a better route to Boston? You know how these companies managed last winter. You have the best of reasons for thinking that they used improper means with the small body of Senators, while they despaired of moulding to their views the large body of the House. Hence the disagreement of the two bodies of legislators.

In other counties we see that the monopolists have not been nominated again. Clifford of Bristol Co., and Metcalf of Norfolk are dropped. Would it not be well to substitute other names for those of Wheatland and Kimball?

Citizens of Essex, you cannot elect Mr. Wheatland or Mr. Kimball; and if you could they would be likely to have as queer views of justice and equity as they had last winter. No charter could be obtained without the assent of the old Companies. You will be bound, hand and foot, if you neglect to look out for yourselves.

GOOD SIGNS FROM SLAVE STATES.

KENTUCKY. The citizens of Mason County Ky., have recently held a public meeting to decide upon the conduct of the people of Lexington, towards Cassius M. Clay, of the True American.—The large majority of the meeting, we are assured, declared themselves to be in favor of gradual emancipation upon principles and plans of Colonization.

NORTH CAROLINA. Cassius M. Clay says, in the last number of the True American; "North Caroline is not asleep. On her own soil, and in kindred spirit with her honored GASTON, men are to be found who will say what they think on the subject of Slavery. God be with and bless them! God uphold and make stable the cause!

J. SHERWOOD, of Jamestown, N. C. proposes the publication of a "Politico Religious newspaper," to be called the "Christian Patriot." He avows sound doctrines, among them, we find the following:

"That as we consider any system of unconditional servitude an assumption of arbitrary power not justified by fundamental principles, which teach, "That all men are created equal: that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights: that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" we hold, that the subject in relation to our American System of African Slavery, should be fairly and fully examined by calm unprejudiced investigation.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—I was pleased to observe in your last paper that many of our fellow citizens had proposed an alteration in the Senatorial ticket for Essex County, by substituting the name of J. C. PERKINS, Esq. in place of Mr. Wheatland. The citizens of Danvers are not disposed to be captious or unfair. They like Whig principles and measures, and have as generously and nobly sustained them as any town in the Commonwealth. But when they look back upon the scenes of last winter, and remember the insolent and overbearing treatment received; the mere farce of a hearing in favor of our Railroad petition, before a committee previously pledged to the old, exploded doctrine of vested rights; it cannot be expected of them to support a man for Senator from whom they received no sympathy or encouragement, and from whom they have no reason to expect any in future. It has been well understood for the past year by the whole community, that Mr. Wheatland would not unite the Whig party; and it is well known how important it is at this time that men should be selected for office who would command the entire strength of the party. The Whigs of Danvers and other towns have frequently made known this state of facts to their friends, and they most distinctly proclaimed it at the Convention by their delegates—yet in the face of all this, Mr. Wheatland received the nomination.—It is usual when an individual who is expected to be a candidate, becomes obnoxious to a portion of his party whether for good or bad reasons, for him to decline being a candidate; and if he will not do that, it would be good policy and sound wisdom to drop him. It is not common for a candidate especially in New England, to resort personally, even to fair means to obtain a nomination, much less will he be found resorting to means which show a great love of office, and a disregard of the popular will. But there appeared to be a determination that Mr. Wheatland should be nominated at all hazards. What controlling secret influence was at work to produce this result, I can only guess at—being a yankee I have that privilege, but will defer it at this time. I do not hesitate to say, that Mr. Wheatland cannot obtain the votes of a large proportion of the Whigs of Danvers. This was made known and well understood before the nomination. The people of Danvers are not responsible for the division of the Whig ticket. If there is anything wrong about it, the blame must fall on other heads. They propose Mr. Perkins because they believe him to be a popular man—always a souud Whig—friendly to the great interests of the whole people—willing to look at all subjects in a fair and impartial manner. And further, if the Whigs do not propose some other candidate than Mr. Wheatland from their own party, many of them will cast their votes for a locofoco, and if that should be the fact, one Senator of that stamp would be elected. We therefore call upon the Whigs in other towns to assist us to elect Mr. Perkins: he will not court the favor of any men or combination of men, however powerful, in disregard of the best good of the whole people. A WHIG.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—I see by the papers, that the Native American Convention have nominated the Hon. Jonathan Shove as one of their candidates for Senators. Mr. Shove is now out of the country, and it is expected he will be for some months. The nomination was probably made without his knowledge or consent. Mr. Shove is an ardent, unflinching Whig. Nothing could drive him from the support of Whig men and measures.—He doubtless is as much of a Native American as the rest of the Whig party, and believes that the objects of that party can be better reached through the Whigs than any other way. DANVERS.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor. It is gratifying to perceive the efforts of your friends in the City to explain and vindicate our rights. There can be no doubt in the mind of any one, that if there could be constructed a Railroad, from Salem through Danvers directly into Boston, without any ferry obstruction or other incumbrance equivalent thereto, that such a road would be of vast benefit to the town of Danvers. Such a road was asked for the last winter. But in consequence of the doctrines put forth by the Railroad committee, in their Report upon the petition of Livingston and others at Lowell, the petitioners concluded it was best to modify their petition, so as to ask for a charter from Danvers to Boston only—thereby avoiding any interference with the rights of the Eastern Railroad Company. By the management of said Company the consideration of this subject was deferred to so late a period of the session, that it was impossible to carry it through; and therefore it was laid over to the coming session. Such I believe to be a brief and true statement of facts in the case. It will be in the power of the petitioners to revive the subject, and we trust it will be their privilege to have a full, fair, and impartial hearing. This is a right common to every citizen, and one that should not be infringed, especially by the combined influence of dictatorial corporations. Such influences are not unfrequently used by the powerful against the rights of the feeble. It is the duty of the Legislature to guard against this. It is said that the prayer of the Petition for the proposed Railroad was defeated the last year "by the notions entertained on the subject of "vested rights" by the Senate and Railroad committee." If this be true, it is high time that the notions of these high functionaries were corrected. For in these days of enlightened views of popular rights, it cannot be that any improvement demanded by the public and clearly necessary for the accommodation of the public, should be defeated by any one consideration of private interest, whether individual or corporate The burden of proof is on those who ask, to show that what they ask is clearly necessary for the public accommodation. If they fail to do this, then they fail to make out their case. It is to be hoped that your intelligent correspondent T. will direct his inquiries to the facts bearing on the view of the subject, and if possible present them in such forms as will convince all who are willing to investigate the matter. We are much more concerned about these facts, than about the antiquated notions of "vested rights". We have our own wishes and prejudices on this question, but we expect an independent and impartial Legislature will be moved only by the consideration of well established facts. To the facts of the case then, let the attention of the friends of the project be directed. W.

At the Native American Convention held in Salem, on Saturday last, the following gentlemen were nominated as candidates for the Senate from Essex Country: Gideon Phillips, of Lynn; Ed. H. Pierce, of Gloucester; Thos. Foss, of Marblehead, and Jonathan Shove, of Danvers. One candidate to be nominaed by the County Committee.—Gaz.

ESSEX CO. TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The 16th Annual meeting of this Association held at Ipswich, on Friday and Saturday of last week was one of unusual interest. The weather was delightful and Teachers from various parts of the Country assembled and took an active part in the meeting. The number of practical teachers in attendance was upwards of 200—greater, we think than at any previous meeting. The court house in which the Association convened, was crowded throughout the continuance of the meeting, and though each session was about 4 hours long the utmost quiet prevailed and all seemed heartily interested until the end.

The lectures were by Messrs Andrews of Lynn, Howard of Newburyport, W. D. Northend of Danvers, and Williams and Jocelyn of Salem. These were all of high order and abounded in sound views and practical suggestions, and he discussions which followed, each lecture were spirited and eminently practical. The main objects appeared to be the discovery and suggestion of true principles and correct educational views; and though slight diversities of opinions existed on some topics, the utmost good feeling and harmony characterized the dissecussions giving indubitable evidence that all were interested in one and the same great and good cause.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, BOSTON.

SAMUEL MCINTIRE V. A. J. AND H. GALE.

This was an action of assumpsit for use and occupation of the plaintiff's stable at Danvers, for 3 months, at $800 per annum—and for board of men in the employ of the defendants. The defence principally relied on was, that the stable had been originally occupied by H. Gale under a written agreement with the plaintiff, whereby he was solely responsible for the rent; and that the agreement had never been annulled. The plaintiff offered evidence to show that after the making of that agreement a partnership was formed between the defendants: that the agreement was then waived, and a new one entered into by parol, by which the defendants become jointly liable; and that the first quarter's rent had been paid by the joint note of the defendants. Various admissions made by both partners were also proved, tending to show a waiver of the original agreement, and a joint liability of the defendants.

MERRICK J. ruled that by entering upon the premises under the original agreement, H. Gale become a tenant at will, and was still solely responsible for the rent unless that agreement had been waived. That though, in general, the admissions of one partner in reference to partnership business, are binding upon the firm, yet the admissions of H. Gale, made after he became solely responsible, and tending to render the other defendant jointly liable with him, were not binding upon the other defendant.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed.

Punishment of Death—Connecticut has severe penal laws, generally faithfuly administered. The Springfield Republican says that John Ronch, a young man who was tried and acquitted for committing a rape in Westfield, a year or two since, has just been convicted at Worcester for a similar offence on a Mrs. Browning of Uxbride, and sentenced to be hung, the penalty of his horrid crime. His youth probably saved him from conviction at the former trial. An endeavor will most probabaly be made for the exertion of Executive clemency to a commutation of his sentence to imprisonment for life. The great and increasing laxity in the morals of the country, observable in the astonishing amount of crime of every degree throughout the Union, is attributable, more than anything else, to the uncertainty of punishment whenever detected.—*N. The elections in Texas are progressing tranquilly under the new Constitution. Henderson is the prominent candidate for Governor; Rusk and Lamar for Senators in Congress.

Burnt to Death.—A child near Philadelphia set fire to its clothes by a newspaper and was burnt to death. Nothing is more common than using paper to kindle. It is sometimes a dangerous agent.

Tomato Catsup.—Cut tomatoes in slices and on every layer sprinkle a little salt; let them stand a few hours, then add a little horse-radish, garlic, pepper and mace; boil well and strain, then bottle, cork and seal for use.

Artesian Well.—Boston wants pure water in abundance, and wants it cheaply. A practical and scientific gentleman offers, for $30,000, to sink an Artesian Well in Boston to the depth of 1700 feet, by which it is estimated that more than a million of gallons of the very best water can be thrown into the city every day, and to a height of at least one hundred feet above the surface of the earth.—An effort is about to be made to raise the money by subscription.

James G. Birney.—We learn by a gentleman from Saginaw that Mr. Birney's illness has been and still is of a very serious character. He experienced a succession of paralytic attacks, or something of the nature of paralysis, which has very materially affected his organ of speech.—Whenever he becomes at all animated in conversation or rapid in his utterance, it is with difficulty that he can be understood. Unless he should obtain relief soon, his career as a public man would seen to have closed. His general health is good. Detroit Adv.

Boston, Concord and Montreal Railroad.—A million of the stock is already secured, and the remaining $400,000 will soon be taken up. It is supposed to be a sound and good investment.

The Disease in the Potato Crop. The King of the Belgians has issued an ordinance appointing a commission to examine and report upon all the communications and documents received by the government on the subject of the disease of the potato.

The Church Militant.—In Mexico, it is said there are three thousand five hundred secular clergy, one thousand seven hundred monks and two thousand nuns, owning property valued at one hundred million dollars.

DEATHS.

In this town on Monday evening last, CHARLES AUGUSTUS youngest child of Mr. Samuel and Frances Ham, aged 5 years.

Happy child, all pain is over,
Never will thy head ache more;
Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Till the great decisive hour.

May thy happy spirit hover,
Round thy mother's aching heart,
Hard it was to yield her darling,
To death's cold and piercing dart. S.

HOWARD TENT—No. 87—I. O. OF R.

Meet every Monday evening, at quarter past 7 o'clock, in the new Hall, near the South Church, Danvers. Members of the Order generally are respectfully invited to attend. A uniformly punctual attendance of the members is requested.

THOMAS TRASK, C. R.

WM. H. HOWLAND, Sec.

To the Honorable County Commissioners for the county of Essex.

THE petition of the undersigned respectfully shows, that the public highway leading from Reading through Lynnfield, by the Hosiery Factory, in Danvers to Salem, is at present in a condition that does not reasonably accommodate the public in the uses required to be made of it. Particularly that part of said way, situate in the westerly part of the Town of Danvers, extending from near the boundary line of Lynnfield to King's corner, a distance of about three miles. Many parts of this way are so narrow, crooked and badly located, as to be incapable of being repaired, until essential alterations are made in the width and position of the same. Wherefore your petitioners ask that the same may be viewed and such alterations ordered as the public convenience demands. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

JAMES MARSH, and alii.

October, 1845.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ESSEX ss. Court of County Commissioners October Term, A. D. 1845.

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, That said petitioners give notice to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at the Lynnfield Hotel in said Lynnfield, on Friday the twenty-first day of November next at ten o'clock, A. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said Petition and of this Order, thereon, in the Danvers Courier, a newspaper printed in Danvers, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said twenty-first day of November—And also by serving each of the Town Clerks of Lynnfield and Danvers with an attested copy of said Petition and this Order, thirty days at least, and by posting up an attested copy thereof in two public places in each of said town, fourteen days, at least, before the said twenty-first day of November, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and take such order in relation to the Prayer of said Petition, as by law they may be authorized to do. E, SHILLABER, Clerk.

A true copy of Petition and Order thereon.

Attest, E. SHILLABER, Clerk.

A Book for every Young Man.

BEECHER'S LECTURES TO YOUNG MEN. Just published by JOHN P. JEWETT & Co., No 193 Essex street, Salem, and for sale by the principal Booksellers in the United States, the above valuable Work. It is a book with which every young man should be familiar, and it is no disparagement of any similar work to say that one better adapted to the present times has never appeared from the American Press. It is a string of gems, from begining to end, filled with the most soul-stirring descriprions of the dangers which beset young men, particularly in our large cities. No one, old or young, can peruse it without profit and delight. It is written in a style so bold and imaginative, that the attention is, at once arrested and rivited, and it is with difficulty that it can be laid aside. This is the second edition; the first was published in the West and met with a rapid sale.

NEW STORE,

AND AN ENTIRE NEW STOCK OF

New and Cheap Goods.

GEORGE C. VARNEY & CO.,

HAVE great pleasure in informing their former patrons and the public generally, that having completed their NEW STORE, on the same site occupied by their old one, at

No. 13 Front Street, Salem.

they are now opening a full, complete, and well selected assortment of.

WEST INDIA GOODS,

AND BEST

FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to dispose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a per centage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition to the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

WOOD, BARK, HAY, &c

☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurances to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerous patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

NEW ENGLAND

TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 254, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of his city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfec ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

POETRY.

THE COMING OF AUTUMN.

The leaves on the bough stirr'd
Are fading and falling,
And the wind and the wood-bird
Are mournfully calling;
And music around us,
Of landscape and river,
And feelings that bound us,
Are passing forever.

The mists of the mountain,
With morning upspringing,
The chime of the fountain,
In melody ringing,
The foam where the river bursts
Up to the day,
And all by the sweet stream nurs'd,
Passing away!

So hearts we have cherish'd
When life was before us,
Are grown cold or perish'd
As years have rolled o'er us;
And we look in the faces
Once glowing with gladness,
And we find in their places
But sorrow and sadness.

O, life, it is tearful!
We're all of us sighing;
The moment we're cheerful
That moment we're dying;
And all we have tasted,
And all we have spoken,
Are hopes that are wasted,
And hearts that are broken.

WOMAN.

BY HANNAH MORE.

As some fair violet, loviest of the glade,
Sheds its mild fragrance on the lonely shade,
Withdraws its modest head from public sight,
Nor courts the sun, nor seeks the glare of light:
Should some rude hand profanely dare intrude,
And bear its beauties from its native wood,
Exposed abroad its languid colors fly,
Its form decays, and all its odors die.

So woman: born to dignify retreat,
Unknown to flourish, and unseen be great;
To give domestic life its sweetest charm;
With softness polish, and with virtue warm:
Fearful of fame, unwilling to be known,
Should seek but Heaven's applauses, and her own;
Should dread no blame, but that which crimes impart,
The censures of a self-condemning heart.

COMMUNICATION.

FOR THE COURIER.

DANVERS INDEPENDENT RAILROAD, No 3.

Mr. Editor—My only plea of excuse for trespassing so much upon your time and patience, in two former communications upon the hacknied subject of vested rights, is to be found only in the fact, that the reasonable and unanimous request of the citizens of Danvers, sanctioned as it was by a very large body of the voters of Essex county, should have been shipwrecked upon a shoal so long supposed to be overwhelmed and sunk beneath the resistless current of public sentiment and judicial decision. But from the result we have learnt that in the upper, or as it is sometimes called, the aristocratic branch of our State government, it retained existence of sufficient vitality to produce its natural and legitimate effect, viz—to defeat the will, and disregard the rights of the people; and that solely to augment the emoluments of grasping and insatiate corporations.

I am well aware that it is unnecessary for me to remind the electors of Essex, that the day is at hand when their just rebuke will be fully realized by each and every senator, who thus distinguished himself by setting at naught the will of his constituents, so clearly, unequivocally and unanimously expressed, since no one as we predict, has a sufficiency of redeeming traits in his character to obtain one in four of the votes of the county.—Nor is Essex alone in this matter; the same cause which operates there, will infuse a silent but certain efficacy through other counties which will fully illustrate the beauty and power of our political system, and its inevitable tendency to give tone and sentiment to each department of the government, until it becomes a certain index of the public mind on all the great political doctrines of the day. We know there are honest political differences in the community, which it is not expected or even desired, may be brought to any uniform or standard creed. And while we tolerate these differences, our decided conviction is, that the welfare, and property of our State and country, will be best promoted by the adoption, and practical operation of those principles denominated Whig principles. And we have always felt slandered, when our opponents have charged us with being hostile to the rights of the people, and inclined to favor and pamper aristocracies, corporations, &c. We still feel slandered by the charge and deny its truth, when applied to the Whigs as a party. And the Whigs of Massachusetts, and of Essex, will triumphantly deny its truth, by displacing those, who having been entrusted by them with power, have by their official acts pleaded guilty to the entire charge. Therefore, this subject I leave with the utmost assurance, that the great barrier which stood between the people of Danvers and a charter for an independent Railroad last winter, will be broken down next; and if they go forward with the same persevering exertions, their prayer will doubtless be granted.

Let us inquire, why the people of Danvers should have a Railroad? And why they are not well accommodated with existing Railroads?

In the first place, it will be acknowleged, that Railroads everywhere follow business; that is, where there is a sufficiency of business to justify the outlay, there is, or soon must be, a Railroad—otherwise, if business cannot induce a Railroad to come to its aid, it will withdraw itself, and seek a location, which has the advantage of this great facility; for the obvious reason, that he who enjoys it in the prosecution of his business—particularly if a manufacturing business like that of Danvers, will soon outrival his less fortunate competitor, and monopolize his trade.

Now there are few towns in the commonwealth of more extensive business than the town of Danvers; very few when the cities are excepted—perhaps none of more active capital—more enterprising habits, and a larger amount of business in proportion to its population. At any rate I do not believe there is one to be found, which will compare with it in all these respects, which has not more direct Railroad facilities.

It ts true the principle and great business of the town, has been less productive recently, than in former times; and this is only another strong reason, why they should have the advantage of a direct, and independent Railroad. With such an advantage, they would be enabled to transport their ten or twelve thousand tons of merchandise (more or less,) annually to Boston their market both of purchase and sale, for a dollar per ton less than present rates. This ten or twelve thousand dollars, is no inconsiderable item, to be annually withdrawn from the profits of a business, already so depressed by a powerful competition, as to afford but a scanty remuneration, to those engaged in its prosecution; a competition in which, those have an essential advantage, who can avail themselves of the aid of Railroad transportation; and operating oppressively against those, who although they have the means, and the disposition, and ask only the privilege to provide themselves with the improved mode of conveyance, are confined to the old and expensive mode of transportation, by baggage waggons. It is not wonderful that they complain of this infraction of their common rights, since they are thus confined by the Legislature, for no other assignable reason, as the record of the last session bears testimony, than that based upon an antiquated and exploded theory, which civilization has fairly outlived, to wit: by granting them equal rights with their neighbors, could no longer hold them as tributaries; for by virtue of the grant, they would speedily open a new channel of transportation affording them every accommodation, for at least one third less expense of money, and a still greater saving of time, to say nothing in his place, of other advantages of so great moment as to merit a separate consideration hereafter.

This annual saving of thousands of dollars, to the people of Danvers in their bills of freight and fare, to Boston, (it is virtually agreed, by certain creatures of the government,) just as rightfully belongs to the Eastern Railroad Corporation, as there is truth in the doctrine of vested rights. It matters not and iota, in the mind of any man, who has faith in this doctrine of half a dollar and an hour and a quarter are taxed for that which would be better done, for thirty cents in as many minutes. It matters not if the people of Danvers, are farther removed from the city of Boston than the people of Ipswich, for every practical purpose. It is childish in the citizens of the former town, to complain that the citizen of the latter gets home before him when they leave Boston together, although this latter town, is some dozen miles more distant from the metropolis. It is only the manifestation of a restless spirit, in the people of Danvers, to murmur against paying coach fare to Salem—and against that which to a less irritable people, would prove only an agreeable variety, viz, the ferry—and against the merchandise and vehicles for its transportation, which happen to obstruct the only avenue leading up to the city, from the ferry: and all this, because they have been entertaining hopes of going directly into the city's centre, without the intervention of coaches, steamboats or wharves, in about half the time, and for about half the money, and because they would have realized these hopes, but for the Eastern Railroad Corporation, as all the world except that corporation, is in favor of the improvement. But what proves all this? Who of all the world except this corporation has any chartered rights to be trifled with, and violated by the opening of this new road?—Here is the question, and this is the principle at stake. All the foregoing are minor considerations, when a great doctrine is in jeopardy; a doctrine, revered and respected in by gone days; instituted with speeial reference to questions of this sort, long before common men dabbled in matters of legislation. This is the great principle we the Eastern Railroad Corporation wish to preserve inviolate, from the ravages of modern innovations. And we do submit to the people of Danvers, whether going to Boston by stage, Railroad and water travel, if it should cost a little more time and money, is not a less evil, than the introduction of that radical policy, which is breaking up all the distinctions formerly recognized, and which under the name of equality, has so affected the people, and the government, that we have already no security for the enjoyment of any exclusive privilege. So that if one obtains a charter, and under it is realizing an hundred fold for his capital and industry, a second and a third, are admitted to the full enjoyment of all his chartered rights, until a competition is produced, which results mainly if not only in the general good.

Such was not always the case: witness among English corporations, that vast and gigantic political mercantile association, the East India Corporation nearly two hundred and fifty years old, whose immense resources, have raised about them an entrenchment of power, which bids defiance to to the combined energy of Kings and commons.—A century ago, the people alarmed at the unlimited power, and dominion which had accrued to them from their vested and chartered rights, made a desperate effort to prevent the renewal of their charter, but could not resist the power of their vast wealth. The government at the time, being straightened for money, the company came forward, proffered a loan of ten millions of dollars 3 per cents, in case of a recharter, obtained their object, and are still flourishing, as impregnable as the power of more than three hundred millions of dollars can make them. And as Edmund Burke said of them and said justly, "they have sold every Monarch, Prince and state in India—broke every contract, and ruined every Prince and every state that ever trusted them." So much for one example of the practical operation of vested rights.

But Mr. Editor I must bring this article to a close.

I am assured that the citizens of Danvers entertaining correct views of their rights, and of the great advantages which would accrue to them, both in their individual capacity, and as a town, by being permitted to exercise the same, will see to it, first, that at the Senate board those rights shall be respected, and second, that at an early day of the session their case shall be presented. And in the mean time permit me to offer a few further considerations in favor of an independent Railroad.

ALLY RAY:

OR FIRST AND SECOND LOVE.

'Your village, dear aunt, is certainly a most picturesque and beautiful place,' said George Murray, a young collegian, to his aunt, with whom he was spending a vacation. It was a bright summer morn, and George had loitered in the breakfast room to have a chat with aunt Mary.

The little village of B. was situated in a most picturesque portion of one of our northern States. George had always resided far south; and the mountainous, beautiful scenery of his aunt's northern home, united to the high state of cultivation and air of comfort spread over the numerous surrounding forms, caused him constant expressions of admiration. He stood at the window of his breakfast room gazing on the beautiful view before him. All at once he exclaimed, come here, dear aunt, who is this beautifull girl? I met her yesterday as I was riding; she is now coming through the grove toward the back part of the house.'

'That is little Ally Ray, a great favorite with us. She is the village shoemaker's daughter, and a good, nice, industrious little girl is she.'

'A shoemaker's daughter!' cried the southern bred youth, 'you are jesting, dearest aunt Mary, surely.'

'Not at all,' said his aunt, laughing merrily at his manner. 'She is most truly the daughter of Job Ray, and a most excellent shoemaker he is but your aristocratic notions are quite shocked, are they not, dear George? Is she not pretty—she has stopped to caress Carlo; see that little, plump hand and well rounded arm—the delicate foot and ankle. Father Job has fitted the foot pretty well, if the shoe is heavy; and her form is pretty—so nicely proportioned. The morning breeze has blown some little rebellious curls from the comb with which she so carefully confines them—see them 'stealing,' as Irish Mary says, from under the bonnett, and that rosy cheek, George, and bright eye. Foolish fellow! I suppose you think a shoemaker's daughter should be coarse, rough and uncouth. Why Ally—or Alice, as is her real name—is as gentle as a town bred girl, and infinitely better bred, kindness and love have nurtured her. She is a notable little housewoman likewise, for her mother died some years past, and her poor father is an invalid. She takes care of the little garden, which produces most of their simple food, and your uncle sends one of the farm men once in a while to give, as they say, 'little Ally a lift.' Job is able at times to work at his trade, and his work is so well done that it meets with a ready sale; that money buys the few things economical little Ally and her father need. That plump little hand scrubs, washes, bakes and sews. She is a notable industrious little body. And she is not ignorant either; during the winter she attends the country school, and as I visit the city I know well that the most acceptable present I can bring to Ally will be some addition to her little collection of books. She does a great deal of sewing for me also. But I must not stop here chattering. Ally has come to bring home some work undoubtedly, and Roos's new Sunday dress pattern came from the storekeeper's yesterday, and Ally must make it quickly. Come Rose.' And the lively light hearted Mrs. Mills hastened from the room. The youth leaned against the window long after the pretty Alice had disappeared, and then suddenly recalling his thought, he ordered his horse and galloped off on his morning ride.

Two months passed by, and the country surrounding B. was even more beautiful than it had been during the summer. A slight frost had touched the foliage, giving it a rich autumnal hue.—George Murray and Alice Ray were wandering in the woods together. The boy lover gazed with passionate earnestness on the innocent face of the lovely child, while her bright eyes were cast down, that he might not see the tears that dimmed her violet beauty. They were on the eve of parting. The next day and he would be far from her. Her guardian had resolved that he should finish his studies at a German university, and years must intervene before they could again meet—possibly never.

'You must always love me, dearest,' murmured the youth, 'believe me always true; in a few years I shall be master of my own actions, then I will return to claim my little Alice for my wife. Remember, my own one, that you belong to me. Ah, Alice, do not, do not forget me.'

The poor child, overcome with the thoughts of their separation wept bitterly, and he soothed her grief with assurances of their happy future. She gazed with sad pleasure at the little locket he had purchased for her, and which contained some of his hair, while he claimed one little curl in return and bent over her to choose the silky lock—the sun was at its setting, and its rays shot through the trees, shedding a golden light upon the lovers—was it a beam of hope as a type of the future?

He left his country with saddened feelings but looked toward the future with the bright eye of youthful expectation. He never dreamed of how differently he and poor Ally might be situated towards each other in a few years. What sympathy and companionship could exist between the high bred, finished man of the world, that years residence abroad might make the now impetuous youth, and lowly Ally Ray. Poor Ally! one would almost pray that she might soon forget him—but no, her early training had strengthened her in confidence and truth; she had never met with insincerity. Brought up in the quiet village, her pious soul never dreamed of change or falsehood—hers was not a nature to forget.

The first letter George received from his aunt Mary told him of poor Job Ray's dangerous illness; he was near dying when she wrote and Ally's uncle, who lived in the 'far west,' was to come on for her in case of her father's death.

'I would adopt her myself,' wrote the kindhearted aunt Mary—'dear little creature, I am exceedingly attached to her, and I would bring her up as my daughter; my boys already love her as a sister, and you, dear George, would not, I think, object to her as a cousin—but her father wishes she should go with her uncle.'

Poor George was almost frantic at the news, and when he heard again from B., Ally's father was dead, and she, poor girl, had left with her uncle for her new home in the then wild west.—He could gain no certain information as to Ally's residence. She had promised to let aunt Mary know, when she was settled, but if she wrote, the letter must have been lost, for they never heard from her.

* * * * * * * *

Many changes took place befors George Murray returned from Europe. Sweet aunt Mary was dead, and when he visited B., on his return to this country, he found many things to sigh over.—Uncle Mills had supplied his gentle, thrifty wife's place with another spouse—a stately, dignified maiden lady he had wooed and brought to his home. The village had much increased. A large hotel had sprung up where father Job's sweet little cottage had stood. Scarcely a spot remained as in those happy days when he and Ally wandered through the forest.

To do him justice, he still remained unchanged in his love for Ally; it was true that he expected to find her far distant from him in point of mental culture, but then he comforted himself with the anticipation of taking her to a lovely Italian home and by patient love lessons soon making her a suitable companion. But no Alice was to be found; the villagers had even forgotten her, and he left the place with deeper, heavier sadness than he had years before. Then hope danced merrily before him—now the future contained the anticipation of a sweet wife, Alice and his happiness. His uncle, who had been his guardian, was a bachelor, and resided on a large plantation at the south. He and his nephew were much attached to each other, and to his home did George repair, and so readily did he fall into the solitary habits of his uncle's bachelor life, there seemed little possibility of his heart ever owning another love—but who will answer even fot their own constancy?

* * * * * * *

'I wish you would marry, George,' said his uncle one day after dinner. They had just arrived in Washington, in which place they intended staying a short while during 'the season.' 'A sweet little wife,' his uncle continued, 'would cheer up our lonely plantation. I wonder you have never married—handsome, wealthy, nothing to prevent you.'

'Why, my dear uncle,' exclaimed George, laughing, 'you should have set me the example yourself; why did you never marry?'

'I should have done so, George,' replied his uncle, sadly, 'but the only woman I ever loved, died suddenly on the eve of our marriage.—Heigho! had she lived, I should not now be the lonely creature I am. I visited my friend Morton, this morning, while you were lazily resting after your journey—the one whose political course you so much admired—he looked so happy; he was stretched out on a lounge, reading, while his daughter, a beautiful witch, was singing and playing away merrily, to cheer her old father—how I wished she belonged to me—and then I thought she would make such a glorious wife for you."

'What! Miss Mary Morton?' exclaimed George, 'why she is the the acknowledged belle of Washington, nay, of every place, and she is noted for rejecting every one; they accuse her of possessing neither ambition nor heart. Young Smiley bored me for an hour this morning with her peerless charms and accomplishments.'

But George did not find himself so bored when he met with Miss Morion. He found her indeed beautiful and accomplished, but at the same time there was a frank air in her greeting that made him forget she was a belle and a stranger. Her bright eye danced most roguishly as she returned his ceremonious salutation, and noticed her uncle's gratified look.

He was soon her favored attendant. She rode, drove and danced constantly with him, until every one pronounced it a match. George was deeply fascinated with her, but the same time he felt a keen remorse for his bad faith to Ally, and a feeling of dissatisfaction would come over him when he caught himself contrasting this high bred beautiful creature with the lowly Ally Ray.

'I never could love but once,' said the belle one evening in a brilliant circle as one talked of first and second love. "A fig for second love, there is no such thing," and she extended her hand to George with a strange look of mingled confidence and mischief, as the band struck up a waltz—his brain whirled as her soft breath played upon his cheek during the bewitching measure of the music—he scarce knew how he moved. 'I tell her all,' he murmured to himself—'she may refuse me, but she shall know that there can be a wild, devoted second love. And he told her all the next morning as she was arranging some new flowers the gardener had brought for her tiny conservatory. George dwelt on the fervency of his love for Ally—he described with manly sincerity her girlish beauty, and confessed nobly his deep affections for even her memory—the maiden blushed, and tears trembled in her bright eyes as he dwelt on the sad years after they parted.

'But why did you not write to her?' said she in low tones, as she bent over a fragrant plant.

'I did, over and over again, but in utter desperation, for I knew not even where she lived.'

'She never received your letter,' said Miss Morton, turning toward him—he gazed at her wildly—'George! George!' whispered she, as she drew from her breast the little locket, 'and have you not recognized your Ally?'

It was indeed sweet Ally Ray. But we will leave our hero and heroine to enjoy their delirium of love, while we explain in sober language how the little Ally Ray was thus metamorphosed into the brilliant Mary Morton. Her uncle had become a distinguished man. The eastern and northern states send many such men as Eldred Morton out into the far west, to seek their fortunes, and the habits of self dependence they are early taught, make them strong in the strife and struggle of life. Ally Ray's name at her christening had been Mary Alice. Uncle Eldred loved better to call her Mary, for the only daughter he ever had, and who died in her childhood had been named Mary, after Alice's mother, his only sister. Mary forgot at last that Ally was not his own daughter, and the old man wished that the world should think her his child.—Through his indulgence and care she had every opportunity of education. Keen natural abilities, united to the earnest desire of fitting herself as an equal bride for George when they should meet, accomplished much; and at five and twenty the brilliant belle Mary Morton would never have been taken for the modest, gentle little Ally Ray. Life has many such changes, reader.

ST. GILES AND ST. JAMES.

The following extract from this celebrated article of Douglass Jerrold, gives the reflections of a convict returned from transportation, on witnessing a public execution.

And now is St. Giles aroused by a stream of people passing upward and downward, and as though led by one purpose turning into the Old Bailey. "What's this crowd about?" he asked of one, and ere he was answered, he saw far down at Newgate door a scaffold and a beam; and a mass of human creatures, crowded like bees, gazing upon them.—'What's this? answered a fellow with a sneering leer—"Why, where do you come from to ask that? Why, it's king George's new drop, and this is the first day he's going to try it. No more hanging at Tyburn now; no more drinks of ale at the Pound. It's all now to be the matter of a minute, they say. But it will never answer, it never does; any of these new-fangled things Nothing like the old horse and cart, take my word for it. Besides, all London could see something of the show when they went to Tyburn, while next to nobody can be accommodated in the Old Bailey. But it serves me right. If I had n't got so precious drunk last night, I'd been up in time to have got a place near the gallows. Silence! There goes eight o'clock."

And as the hour was struck by the bells of Christian churches—of churches built in Christ's name, who conquered vengeance by charity—men were led forth to be strangled by men, their last moments soothed and made hopeful by Christ's clergyman. Indeed, it is long and hard teaching, to make nations truly read the Testament they boast of.

There was a sudden hush among the crowd; and St. Giles felt himself rooted where he stood; with gaping mouth, and eyes glaring towards Newgate.—The criminals, trussed for the grave, came out.

'One—two—three—four—five—six—seven" —cried St. Giles in a rising scream, numbering the wretches as each passed to his place—"eight—nine—ten—Good God! how many?"—and terror-stricken, he could count no further.

And then the last night's bacchanal next St. Giles, took up the reckoning, counting as he would have counted so many logs of wood, so many sacks of coals—'Eight—nine—ten—eleven—twelve—thirteen fourteen—fifteen. That's all; yes, it was to be fifteen; that little chap 's the last. Fifteen."

Reader, pause a moment. Drop not the book with sudden indignation at the writer who, to make the ingredients of his story "thick and slab," invents this horror. No; he but copies from the chronicles of the Old Bailey. Turn to them, incredulous reader, and you will find that on the balmy morning of the twenty-third of June, in the year of our Offended Lord, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four, fifteen human beings were hanged in front of Newgate; death-offerings to the laws and virtues of merry England. It was the first day, too, of the new drop; and the novel engine must be greeted with a gallant number. Fame has her laurels; why should not Justice have her ropes? There was, too, a pleasantry—the devil, if he joke at all, must joke after some such fashion—in trying the substance and capacity of a new gallows, by so much weight of human flesh convulsed in the death-struggle. And so—great was the legislative wit!—there were fifteen to be strangled A great example this to an erring, law-breaking world of—the strength of timber!

The lords of the privy council had met, with good king George the Third at their head, to correct the vices of the land. There was death for the burglar—death for the footpad—death for the sheep-stealer—death, death, death for a hundred different sinners.—

The hangman was the one social physician, and was thought to cure all peccant ills. Horrible, ghastly quack! And yet the king's majesty believed in the hideous mountebank, and every week, by the advice of his lords of the council—the wise men of St. James, the magi of the kingdom, the starred and gartered philosopers and philanthropists—every week did sacred royalty call in Jack Ketch to cure his soulsick children! Yea; it was with the hangman's fingers that the father of his people touched the People's Evil. And if in sooth the malady was not allayed, it was for no lack of paternal tending, since we find in the Old Bailey Register—that thing of blood, and bigotry and ignorance—that, in one little year, in almost the first twelvemonth of the new drop, the hangman was sent to ninety-six wretches, who were publicly cured of their ills in the front of Newgate! And the king in council thought there was no such remedy for crime as the grave; and therefore, by the counsel of his privy sages, failed not to prescribe deathwarrants To reform man was a tedious and uncertain labor; now hanging was the sure work of a minute.

DANVERS COURIER.

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV 1, 1845.

WHIG NOMINATIONS.

FOR GOVERNOR

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

JOHN REED.

WHIGS!! TO THE RESCUE!!

The Election is rapidly approaching which is to determine the political character of the State Administration for the next year—to decide whether the sound principles and wise policy which have made us prosperous and happy at home and respected abroad are still to be our safeguard and defence, or whether radical dogmas and the selfish schemes and crazy plots of demgogues and disorganizers are to violate our domestic peace and sully our good name. These are not vain words, they are sober and earnest, and truthful. It is no mere party triumph which we are to contend for It is for that which concerns our actual, tangible interests, which touches our business and our pockets, which involves the laws we are to obey and the education we are to give our children, which comes home to every man's house and hearth and embraces all that, is near and dear to him.

We know that many good people, tired of continual strife, and seeing public affairs so much the sport of private ambition and interest, are sometimes ready to think that all this political excitement is useless, and that whichever side wins the day, the result will be about the same and the interests of the mass little affected either way. Never was there a more fearful delusion. Whether we look at the respective principles or measures of the two great parties, at their present or at their past course, but a single conclusion can be drawn, that in the path of one party is safety, in that of the other danger—that one is prudent, cautious, conservative, the other reckless, destructive, radical—that while the Whigs adhere strictly to the Constitution and to the fundamental truths of moral and political science, and upon this sound basis labor to secure to the people all the legitimate fruits of true republican government, the Democrats openly scoff at the maxims of wisdom which time and our father's blood have hallowed, proclaim novel and dangerons doctrines, and, in attempting to carry them out, either wilfully or ignorantly hazard all that we have ever regarded as most essential and dear. Nor are we left to conjecture as to the result which would ensue if the party to whom we are opposed should succeed in their obstinate struggles to secure power. We have had one dreadful lesson, one fatal reality, to prove that our fears are not wild and groundless, and to show to those who think little or nothing is at stake that momentous issues are involved and that upon the cast of the die depends much that is vital to the citizen and the State. We have but to refer to the year 1842 and the administration of Marcus Morton, to recall a time and a scene which must make every good man shudder with affright—a reign of terror, when the Constitution was trampled upon, the laws violated, and the Judiciary debased, when corruption, sat in high places, and legislation became a matter of bargain and trade, and the public credit was impeached and impaired, and the Massachusetts Whig who went among strangers for the first time blushed to acknowledge that he was a citizen of the Old Bay State. How many a good man through whose indifference and sloth the evil had come to pass, then solemnly resolved in mortification and sorrow, that never again would he neglect the precious right of suffrage, never again forget his duty and sacred oath of a freeman. And now, fellow citizens, the time has come in which to remember that resolution and to fulfil that oath. There is no use of mincing the matter or of disguising the truth,—we are in danger, in imminent danger, and if we are saved, it will be but as by fire. Our opponents are in the field, active, energetic, united, employing every means fair or foul, and straining every nerve to win the victory—on our side is apathy and fear. Besides these moral foes, we have to struggle against actual causes of distraction and disaffection. We have to contend, not only against the inertness and despondency of our friends, but against new parties and factions which scatter our ranks and threaten confusion and defeat. In this crisis, what shall we do? Whigs, what shall we do? Shall we like cravens and dastards retreat from the contest and give up the day, or shall we like men do our whole duty, fight the battle bravely, and leave the rest to Providence? Is there any virtue in the term Whig, and does it mean anything? Are there any such things as Whig principles, and is their triumph of any interest to the people or at all essential to the prosperity of the State? Is it not the fancy of a dream that our fathers toiled and bled to establish them? Have we not for years been grasping at a shadow and fighting for a mere name? Have we not all our lives been hypocrites and preached deceit and a lie? Then by all that is interest, and duty, and truth and honor, let us live up to the faith which is in us, and show to the world that we are neither fools or knaves, but honest and sober men, conscious of the right and resolved to defend and maintain it.—

Fellow citizens! Whigs! We call you to the rescue. We ask you to remember your solemn professions and to fulfil your sacred vows. Above all, we ask you to recall that old motto upon your banners, "In union only is victory." If what you have always pretended is true, that you have in view no paltry ends, but the salvation of the Commonwealth—if what you preach is your honest conviction, that Whig ascendancy has made Massachusetts more prosperous, enlightened and happy than any other state in the Union; that it has given wealth to the rich man, labor and contentment to the poor; encouraged manufactures, turned the farmer's harvest into gold, and nerved the mechanic's arm; that it has protected your property, educated your children, guarded your laws, and honored your religion;—and if, as you must, as you say you do, believe, that all this and much more would be perilled by the success of your opponents, and that success is now threatened—then for God's sake, for the sake of humanity, and truth, and your fathers' honor, and your children's hopes, forget and forego all other considerations but the common good, and seal your faith and satisfy your consciences at the ballot box. The Whig whose political principles are the result of conviction and reason, and who yet neglects to do everything in his power to secure their triumph, is a false christian and a bad man.

"What can the difference be 'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee."

The Locofocos in Salem seem to be by the ears in regard to what Democracy is, and who belong to the regular fold. A meeting of the party was held some weeks since and resolutions were passed full of venom and spite against Ex. Gov. Morton, collector of the Port of Boston, and subsequently, on last Saturday evening, the same clique had another meeting and proceeded to the organization of the party, and nominated candidates for the Legislature. This last movement roused the before dormant powers of the 'unterified,' who were opposed to the proceedings against the collector, and a hand bill was issued, signed by some forty or fifty, calling a meeting, to be held Monday evening. The meeting was accordingly holden, and from the short account of it in the Salem Register, it was not a very brotherly affair. The Mortons and anti Mortons not content with bandying words, showed a disposition of settling the affair by fisticuffs, but a timely adjournment prevented. The Register dont care which side beats but as it is for fair play, it publishes the proceedings of the Monday evening meeting, at the request of its secretary, as the Salem Advertiser refuses to do it. High times, these, for the Democracy!

THE WHIGS OF DANVERS

Will bear in mind that a Caucus for the nomination of Candidates for Representatives to the next General Court will be held at Union Hall on Monday Evening next.

At a meeting of the Whig Committee of South Danvers, held on Thursday evening last, the following Committees of vigilance were chosen for the different School Districts of this part of the town.

District No 1 W. D. Northend, W. Cutler, P. Tufts, M. Tenney, J. R. Poor, W. H. Little, C. E. Brown.
District No. 6, John Pike, A. Putnam Jr.
District No. 7, George Southwick, S. McIntire.
District No. 8, J. Shaw, J. Prescott.
District No. 9, John Mansfield.
District No. 10, Elias Needham, J. P. Goodale.
District No. 11, E. W. Upton, J King, A. Gould, F. Dane, J. Whitney, T. Holmes, J. Dodge.
District No. 12, Miles Osborn, D. Osborn, E. S. Poor, E. Lamson, N. H. Poor.

W. D. NORTHEND, Sec.

☞We have been shown a letter from Hon. JONATHAN SHOVE, of this town, in which he authorizes us to state, that he declines being considered a candidate o the Native American party for the State Senate.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—We shall publish as soon as the press of Railroad matter shall have subsided, an original Tale, entitled "the Norseman's Revenge.

Several communications are unavoidably postponed to our next, amongst others, one from E. in reply to F. of last week.

We regret to learn that Gen. GIDEON FOSTER, of this town is suffering from a severe illness, and that fears are entertained in regard to his recovery.

Messrs. COVERT & DODGE, assisted by the Barton Family will give their last Concert at Upton's Hall, on Monday evening next. We are assured that no exertion will be spared to render this the best Concert ever given in this place, by these celebrated vocalists. Mr. Dodge will on this occasion sing two new comic songs, and deliver a short magnetic lecture. The celebrated and unrivalled vocalists—the Barton Family, consisting of a mother and two children will also assist, in the entertainment. As this will be the last Concert ever given in this place by these gentlemen we trust they will have a full house.

Verdicts of Juries.—Complaints have been made of the verdicts on inquests returned by juries.—The latest is "Death by the visitation of God, in consequence of being intoxicated." Another, "Death by the visitation of God in a natural way, and not otherwise." We see no objections to these verdicts. They are properly and justly expressed.

WHIGS OF DANVERS.

A week only remains before the Election, and it is necessary for you to be at work, if you wish that Danvers should sustain the noble position she has always held, as one of the strongest, most unwavering Whig towns in the county. You know the combinations at work to defeat you, and that they can only be effectually resisted, by strong and manly effort—Whigs, will you make that effort? It is necessary for the certainty of success, that all the Whig votes be brought out to the Polls. Let individuals in different parts of the town take upon themselves the responsibility of getting out all the voters in their neighborhood, and furnish conveyances for those not provided with them, and let all who can, be at the Polls early. A little well-directed individual effort will accomplish much, and let no one hesitate because it is not a national election, for there are principles and measures involved in the success of the Whig party in this state, now, which are of the utmost importance to the interests of its citizens. Other states are doing their duty manfully, Georgia, Ohio, and Florida, have covered th emselves with honor by their noble stand in the recent election. Shall old Massachusetts falter? Whigs of Danvers, see to it that you contribute your share to effect a glorious victory! The time is short, and let it be well improved.

A Supposed Abolitionist or Negro Stealer calling himself John A. Innis of Massachusetts, was arrested in Baltimore on Saturday morning with a black man named John Innifer, whom he was taking off. Both were committed until their characters and conduct could be investigated.—N. Y. Sun.

P. S. Letters have been received in Salem, stating that no one had appeared against the colored man and that both were released. The facts as we learn from the Salem Register are simply, that Mr. Innis, at the request of the mother who resides in Salem, had been to Washington to accompany her son, who wished to visit Salem, as it was thought it would be safer for him to to travel in this manner, then if alone. They had proceeded as far as Baltimore when they were arrested as above stated.—There is no doubt of the freedom of the colored man.

Horrible Murder and Attempt at Arson.—At an early hour yesterday morning, says the Boston Daily Advertiser, of Tuesday, Coroner Pratt was, called to a house situated in the narrow street that runs out of Mt. Vernon street north, between Cedar and Charles streets. On arriving, he found a woman by the name of Mrs. Bickford lying on the floor, dead, her throat having been cut from ear to ear in the most shocking manner. A coroner's inquest was held, and an examination entered upon. The facts as they have appeared are substantially these; Mrs. Bickford, who has a husband living in Maine, is said to have been connected in this city with a man by the name of Albert J. Tirrell, of Weymouth. He visited her on Sunday afternoon and evening, and some of the inmates of the house testified to hearing a quarrel between them. Towards morning a woman in another room hearing a noise, went into Mrs Bickford's room and found her in the situation above named and entirely dead, her throat having been cut by a razor. The room had been set on fire in several places, the mattress was turned up and some matches put into the straw bed beneath.

Coroner Pratt found a vest and cravat in the room and in the vest a bunch of keys. These he took to Tirrell's boarding house and found that they fitted his trunk, desk, &c., exactly.

Tirrell left town yesterday morning, and was last heard of on Weymouth Bridge. Officers have been despatched there for him; also to Salem, New Bedford, Lowell, and Worcester. He is a married man, and has two children and inherited some property. He was recently indicted for adultery, but the matter was compromised by the interference of his wife and friends.

The affair has caused much excitement in the city, and there are many exaggerated reports in circulation. The above statement contains the truth so far as we are able to learn it from those who have the best means of information.

Mrs. Bickford's maiden name, says the Post, was Mary Ann Dunn, and she was born near Bangor, Maine. About five years ago, she was married to James Bickford, shoemaker, in Bangor, and two years afterwards she left him, and lived with whom she pleased, although her husband made some attempts to reclaim her. She was about 25 years of age.

The verdict of Inquest was:

'That Maria Bickford, alias Maria A. Bickford, came to her death on the morning of October 27th 1845, by wounds inflicted by one Albert J. Tirrell, otherwise called Albert J. DeWolf, with a razor, cutting her throat in a manner to cause instant death; and the Jurors aforesaid, on their oaths do say, that the said Albert J. Tirrell, otherwise called Albert J. DeWolf, of his malice aforethought, the said Maria Bickford, otherwise called Maria A. Bickford, did kill and murder against the peace of this Commonwealth and the laws of the same.'

Railways in Cities.—The London and Blackwall and the London and Greenwich Railways, cost the enormous sum of $2,110, 820, for seven miles and a half of road, yet under this enormous expenditure, they pay dividends on transporting upwards of 6,000,000 of passengers annually.

The Regents canal into London, has been purchased at great cost to lay another Railroad into London, while like Boston it is now approached by Railways in every direction, and it is proposed to make a Railway avenue entirely around the great Metropolis. It is estimated that there are near 11 miles of Railways in Philadelphia.—Baltimore has her share along her wharves.—N. Y. Sun.

Manufactures in Russia.—A letter from A. P. Gibson, Esq, United States Consul at St. Petersburg, under date of August 30, says: "The quantity of cotton imported this year, direct from the United States, is 6,992,818 pounds; whereas the highest import heretofore was 3,150,680 pounds in 1843. If this government should not change their present policy in respect to their encouragement of manufacturing establishments, Russia will become a great consumer of raw cotton; for the number of spinning establishments is constantly on the increase, and it is estimated by competent judges, that by the end of this year there will be in operation in the whole empire, from 800,000 to 1,000,000 of spindles."

Eugene Sue, the author of the "Wandering Jew," has been excommunicated by the Archbishop of Lynos, primate of France.

Mr. Editor—You will oblige many subscribers by republishing the list of candidates proposed, as Senators from this county, viz:—

JONATHAN C. PERKINS, of Salem.
DENNIS CONDRY, of Newbury.
EDMUND KIMBALL, Jr., of Wenham.
HENRY POOR, of Danvers.
GEORGE HODGES, of Andover.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—As erroneous opinions are entertained by many Whigs in regard to the views of Mr. Kimball, one of the candidates for the State Senate, in this county, upon the question of the chartering a new Railroad from Salem through Danvers into Boston, I should like through the medium of your paper to state the views of Mr. Kimball upon the subject which he expressed in a conversation which I had with him some time since.

Mr. K. said that as a general rule, he thought that existing railways should be allowed, by constructing branches, to furnish Railroad facilities to the towns in their vicinity, which require them. This he stated in the Senate last winter, and it is probably from that expression alone, he was considered to be inimical to the granting of a charter for a new road from Salem to Boston. But he assured me that he did not think that rule applied to this case, as their is now really no entrance by Railway into Boston, and it has always been his opinion and wish that an entrance should be effected into the city. If the Eastern Railroad Company would not build it, as he said there was no probability they would, he should desire that a new one be constructed by another company from Salem into Boston. He was prepared the last winter if the question had come up for discussion, not only to vote for a new road, but to advocate it, if anything of a case were made out by the Petitioners. His impressions, he said, were very friendly to the project and that unless different circumstances should appear to change his views, he should, the coming winter, if elected, advocate the granting of a charter for the proposed road. His views upon the subject were expressed with the utmost frankness and freedom, and I have deemed it my duty thus to make public those views to correct the erroneous opinions entertained. N.

FOR THE COURIER.

THE GREAT EASTERN AVENUE INTO BOSTON.

Mr. Editor—In the last number of your journal you had a correspondent "W." presenting his views on the Railroad question, and speaking in mellow tones of the rights and duties of the petitioners for the Danvers road. He closes by saying "that the burden of proof is on those who ask, to show that what they ask, is clearly necessary for the public accommodation. If they fail to do this, then they fail to make out their case." And he adds his hope, "that your intelligent correspondent T. will direct his attention to the facts bearing on this view of the subject, and if possible present them in such forms as will convince all who are willing to investigate the matter. We are much more concerned about these facts than about the antiquated notions of "vested rights."—I have italicised a few words in the proceeding quotation ex facto, because I think in that form they give the true exposition of the writer's state of mind, viz: he either totally disbelieves the possibility of our being able to show "that what we ask is clearly necessary for the public accommodation," or he greatly fears that to be the case.—Now I will suppose that this writer is well informed of all the statistics made and of the whole process pursued during the trial before the Legislature last winter. And even further, I will place him by hypothesis in ipso loco of our own counsel at the close of that occasion; because our counsel himself did at that time, by the array of special pleading which was marshalled against us by the opposite counsel and cherished by the Committee, become deluded and terrified into the same fears and opinions, which it strikes me are entertained by your correspondent W. (But in parenthesis I will say that I think that our former counsel is now emerging from the din, fog, and smoke in which his opponents the Committee and the Eastern Railroad Company, by their strength and numbers envelloped him, and will yet come forth with renewed energy to advocate our cause with all the lustiness of his former vigorous, but ex rei necessitate, unskilled onslaught.)

Our counsel did at that time say, or words to the same effect and said truly, "that the public (not the Danvers people or the Lynn people, but the public,) never would, and never could be satisfied with the Ferry and depot of the Eastern Railroad Company, to debouche the vast and yearly accumulating tide of travel of the Eastern seaboard of this continent into the city of Boston."—And sir, it never will. The words are true.—They were true then. They are true now. They were proved true by abundant testimony before that Committee. But this truth, the one great and required truth was blinked, to fondle and cherish the special pleadings of the counsel of the opposite side. And what were some of these special pleadings that tickled the ears of the Committee, and obfusticated the eyes of our own counsel? Why hear! That the petitioners for the Danvers road ought and were obliged to show that they could "accommodate themselves with eight trains a day each way, and pay a fair interest upon the investment required to build and put in operation their proposed road." I here quote the language of the Committee, only making the emphasis.—Again: "It is apparent to all that the Eastern Railroad Company, by running an engine from Salem to Danvers, in connection with the regular trains over their own road, could furnish to the PEOPLE of DANVERS eight daily trains each way, (as they propose to do) at much less expense than could be done by the petitioners, by the road which they propose to construct." Heaven protect us from the tender mercies of what the Eastern Railroad Company could do, or their pretences of proposing to do, if we cannot find an impartial Legislature to protect us. Here then I say, Mr. Editor, in assuming that the Danvers public was all that was to be accommodated, and that we were obliged to show that our income should be sufficient to pay a fair interest on the amount required for building and operating the road, are the points of special pleading where our counsel with some few others of our friends were befogged. It is a postulate which ought not to have been required—one against which our counsel should have protested, and the falsity of it have elaborated.

The amount of travel and freight which would ensue on the road is to be presented to the Legislature to show the amount of accommodation to the great public, not merely the Danvers or Lynn public. Nor how much the Stockholders would gain or lose. This latter question would have been weighed by an impartial Committee only so far as to see some little probability of the road's being constructed, before they troubled themselves about making a charter. If the Commonwealth was called upon by the petitioners to construct and pay for the road, and the Commonwealth at the same time owned the Eastern Railroad, then the whole argument in the report of that enlightened Committee would have been indeed a foreclosure. But what has been the course of the Legislature towards other enterprises of the like kind? Did they stop to enquire whether the Stockholders of the Lowell Road would make 5 or 6 per cent, before they would grant a charter? Not at all. But just the reverse—they granted special privileges for the purpose of encouraging them in the work. In the old Charlestown bridge the same encouragements of various kinds have been made. Aye, the Western Railroad, the Maine Railroad, and a variety of other roads, bridges, &c., &c., for they stalk as thick as Banquo's ghosts before me, I could summon to halt, to substantiate my position. Yes, even the Eastern Railroad itself, as results have proved, did not show on the most extravagant representations which its elastic conscience could make, a sufficient income to pay a fair interest on their expenditure, and there never would have been sufficient, had not the increase of travel which these facilities create, exceeded all human calculation.

On the subject of profit and loss, all that the stockholders have to respond to the Legislature, is the answer which the French merchants gave to Napoleon when he asked them what he should do to advance their interests. 'Nous laissez a faire.' 'Let us alone' The Stockolders will accommodate the public and take care of themselves. For if they don't accommodate the public, they don't know how to take care of themselves.

The Eastern sea-board public want an Avenue clean thro' to Boston. There are other parts of this Committee's report which are brought hobbling in, to support this collossal pith of their lame argument, but your patience will not submit, therefore I leave them, hoping that as you have received E. and F. you will not refuse the next letter. G.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—The Editor of the Salem Gazette, states in last Tuesday's paper, that he has received several anonymous communications, in opposition to one of the Whig Candidates for the State Senate, but declines to publish them for two reasons. First because they had not the signatures of their writers, which every article ought to have, which charges an individual with duplicity, &c. in order that the public may be able to weigh the character of the accuser and accused. This seems to me an extraordinary and unusual requirement with regard to the publishing of political articles; when and where has it been expected that articles of this kind should have the name of the writer attached to them, in order to insure an insertion in a political paper. This new rule was probably made to suit the case, made to order. If he has received communications of the character he states, he probably knew who the writers of them were, and from whence they came, and doubtless they were written by responsible persons. It is a slimsey pretence to avoid giving to the public the views of the writers of the articles. And the notice of them is so carefully worded, that the reader cannot gather one single idea of the subject matter of the communications alluded to. He then further states, that he has also received a communication from an active Whig, complaining of the efforts made in South Danvers to defeat Mr. Wheatland—and mark, reader he then deliberately states what is the object of the communications giving to the public the force and pith of the same, which is; if the efforts of the South Danvers Whigs to defeat Mr. Wheatland, are persisted in, that such measures will be taken as will prevent the election of the gentleman who has been selected from that portion of the County, meaning Mr. Poor of Danvers. In the notices above referred to, there is a want of candor and impartiality, which I have heard charged upon the management of certain concerns, but which I have been slow to believe, but I think no one will deny, that in these notices, there is a feeling of prejudice and unfairness manifested which cannot be misunderstood. Is it not clear, that in stating to the public that he has received two communications expressing opposite views and feelings and while he seems to regret the opposition, expresses a hope that the difficulty may be healed, that he proceeds to indirectly censure one of the writers, and publishes to the world, without censure, the statements of the other, and threatens the party which he evidently considers the guilty one, that he holds in reserve the latter communication, which he insinuates may be used, if the South Danvers Whigs do not square their movements by his rule. And I would here inquire, why the South Danvers Whigs are here alluded to, when it is well known, that Mr. Wheatland has many opponents in the good city of Salem and many other towns. Is it because they in particular, have become obnoxious to the Directors, and some of the stockholders of the E. Railroad Co., by their honest efforts to procure railroad accommodation with Boston in a way and manner they believe would be greatly for their convenience and benefit? Now, Mr. Gazette, we most sincerely and earnestly invite you to publish your communication threatening to defeat the election of the Danvers candidate for the State Senate. When you can justly charge him with duplicity and double-dealing, or any acts which go to show him as destitute of honorable and upright feelings, we will discontinue to support him ourselves. But we despise the meanness which threatens opposition to him for no other cause than that some of his fellow townsmen decline to support Mr Wheatland for what they deem good and sufficient reasons. We wish you to publish it, and let the free and independent electors of the county of Essex know, what we have most strongly felt—the power and influence, the management and insolence of a certain overgrown Corporation. We want the public to know, that they not only claim the control of all the public travel; but that they are extending their influence over a portion of the public press. Let it be understood that communications of a certain character must have the name of the author attached to it; while every scrap which can be found of an opposite tendency must find a conspicuous place.

In conclusion, I say that Mr. Wheatland was nominated against the long established usage of the Whig party—for it was well understood that he could not obtain their united and hearty support. Under this state of facts, he was by the efforts of himself and friends forced upon the public. It was unfair and ungenerous to nominate him. No instance of the kind can be found in any proceedings with regard to nominations heretofore. With these circumstances in view much as we like a united effort to secure the ascendancy of Whig principles we cannot support him. The Editor of the Gazette and his correspondents, may threaten us with their denunciations and displeasure if we do not listen to their instructions as to what is our duty. We shall judge for ourselves, and act accordingly.

A SOUTH DANVERS WHIG.

Freaks of Fortune. The Mayor of New York, remarked at the laying of the corner stone of the new Alms House for that city on Blackwell's Island, that the man who superintended the erection of the present Alms House, is now an inmate within its walls. To this the New York Express adds that another inmate of the establishment, a poor decrepid old man a few years ago strutted Broadway the paragon of fashion, and the envied recipient of smiles and bows from all the fashionable promenaders of that thoroughfare, in his day. N'port Herald.

To the Honorable County Commissioners for the county of Essex.

THE petition of the undersigned respectfully shows, that the public highway leading from Reading through Lynnfield, by the Hosiery Factory, in Danvers to Salem, is at present in a condition that does not reasonably accommodate the public in the uses required to be made of it. Particularly that part of said way, situate in the westerly part of the Town of Danvers, extending from near the boundary line of Lynnfield to King's corner, a distance of about three miles. Many parts of this way are so narrow, crooked and badly located, as to be incapable of being repaired, until essential alterations are made in the width and position of the same. Wherefore your petitioners ask that the same may be viewed and such alterations ordered as the public convenience demands. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

JAMES MARSH, and alii.

October, 1845.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ESSEX ss. Court of County Commissioners October Term, A. D. 1845.

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, That said petitioners give notice to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at the Lynnfield Hotel in said Lynnfield, on Friday the twenty-first day of November next at ten o'clock, A. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said Petition and of this Order, thereon, in the Danvers Courier, a newspaper printed in Danvers, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said twenty-first day of November—And also by serving each of the Town Clerks of Lynnfield and Danvers with an attested copy of said Petition and this Order, thirty days at least, and by posting up an attested copy thereof in two public places in each of said town, fourteen days, at least, before the said twenty-first day of November, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and take such order in relation to the Prayer of said Petition, as by law they may be authorized to do.

E. SHILLABER, Clerk.

A true copy of Petition and Order thereon.

LORRAINE'S PILLS.
All persons require Facts.

Remember in all cases that you are not deceived by thing that appear to be facts.

REMEMBER also, that, Lorraine's Vegetable Pills have in their composition two of the most valuable medicines in the world, viz: Sarsaparilla and Tomatoes. These two articles need no praise, neither do the celebrated Lorraine's Pills, when they have once been taken.

Physicians, and people of every class are willing to come forward and announce, in the most public manner, that they have been cured of long standing complaints—after all other medicines had failed. In fact there can be no doubt but that Lorraine's vegetable Pills is the best medicine ever offered to the public.

See a few public statements of men of truth and virtue.

Lynn, Dec. 17th, 1843.

Sir; I have sold all the pills I last had of you, please send another lot immediately. The sale of Lorraine's vegetable Pills is rapidly on the increase—they are becoming very popular. I sell more and more every day. As a curative medicines and purifier of the blood, I think they stand unrivalled. One fact I have noticed, that no one that has used them fiuds any fault with them; they have wrought some very great cures. One lady, who has been confined to the house and bed, a great part of the time, for twenty years, is now cured and able to work most of her time, after having taken 3 boxes only of Lorraine's Pills! I might name many other cases where the cures have been as great, but have not time.

Yonrs respectfully,
J. E. F. MARSH.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7th, 1843

Sir: Please send us one gross of Lorraine's Pills, we have sold all we had last. They have given very good satisfaction, better than any other pills which we have in our market. I think in a short time they will take the place of others. We have had no fault found with them whatever; but, on the contrary, they have been praised loudly. I think we could have quite a number of highly respectable certificates from our citizens.

Respectfully yours,
E. MASON.

Chelsea. Jan. 3d, 1844

Sir: I transmit to you an account of my case for publication, believing it to be my duty. I have been confined with the Rheumatism nearly the whole winter, have had some of the best physicians of Boston and could get nothing that would relieve me more than temporarily. I heard of the wonderful virtue, of Lorraine's Pills, I had no faith whatever, but I took them, and it is a solemn fact that when I had taken but eight pills! my Rheumatism had entirefy left me, and I have remained well ever since.

N. B. I never took more than one pill at a time and that on going to bed.

Yours respectfully,
W. M. HALSTAL

Sir. I could fill the whole of the Sentinel with similar letters to the above, but believing the above extracts will serve for useful purposes for the present I omit more.

Unable to raise the Hands to the Head!

Sir—For three years, Scrofula had produced such effect upon my constitution, that I was unable to raise my hand; the bones were in different places destroyed by ulcertion, and I feared it might reach the brain or vital organs. My pains were violent—all medicines recommended did no good. At last, I took LORRAINE'S VEGETABLE PILLS, which gave immediate relief, and have entirely cured me.

NEW ENGLAND
TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfec ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answerod in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

May 31 JAMES FREDERICK FOSTER.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.
For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

NEW STORE,
AND AN ENTIRE NEW STOCK OF
New and Cheap Goods.

GEORGE C. VARNEY & CO.,

HAVE great pleasure in informing their former patrons and the public generally, that having completed their NEW STORE, on the same site occupied by their old one, at

No. 13 Front Street, Salem.

they are now opening a full, complete, and well selected assortment of.

WEST INDIA GOODS,
AND BEST
FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to dispose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality, and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a per centage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition io the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurances to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.

☞Please bear in mind that our store is at
NO 13 FRONT STREET.
Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerous patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

POETRY.

THE NIGHT IS CLOSING ROUND, MOTHER.

BY BARRY CORNWALL.

The night is closing round, mother!
The shadows are thick and deep!
All round me they cling, like an iron ring,
And I cannot—cannot sleep!

Ah, Heaven! thy hand, thy hand, mother!
Let me lie on thy nursing breast!
They have smitten my brain with a piercing pain:
But 'tis gone—and now I shall rest.

I could sleep a long sleep, mother!
So, seek me a calm cool bed;
You may lay me low, in the virgin snow,
With a moss bank for my head.

I would lie in the wild woods, mother!
Where nought but the birds are known:
Where nothing is seen but the branches green
And flowers on the greensward strewn.

No lovers there witch the air, mother!
Nor mock at the holy sky;
One may live and be gay, like a summer day,
And at last like the summer—die!

THERE'S BEAUTY EVERY WHERE.

BY JAMES A. BEVERIDGE.

There's beauty in the dashing wave,
When the storm is raging high—
There's beauty in the quiet stream
As it gently glideth by
There's beauty in the cloudless night
When stars are shining clear,
Or darkness shuts them from the sight—
There's beauty every where

There's beauty when the morning dawns
And gives to earth her light,
And when the fading sun proclaims
The slow approach of night.
There's beauty in the verdant lawn
When buds their blushes wear.
And when the ice-king holds his court,
There's beauty every where.

There's beauty when the Christian kneels
In humble prayer to Heaven—
When o'er his soul hope sweetly steals,
And tells of sins forgiven.
There's beauty in the merry sounds
That float upon the air,
When music breathes a happy strain—
There's beauty every where.

COMMUNICATIONS.

FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Editor—The North Danvers Representative has at last discovered that I had denied that there was one word said in his long array of evidence about instructing the Danvers Representatives, but says he shall make no comment upon it and does not quote a single word to show that there was any such instructions, but sends his readers back to his old compilations to hunt them up, but I can tell them it will be a vain search, for if neither he nor I can find them who can? I have ever been anxious to discuss the strongest points that the N. D. R. could present in his defence. To gratify our friend I should like to say a few words more on his favorite topic of "instructions," as it is now presented in this case. The town by petition say that they wish to have a Road and that they think the public good requires it and give some of the principal reasons why it should be granted, the court proceed to examine all the evidence for and against the petition—our Representatives are apart of the court to sit in judgement, to weigh the evidence, and o ght t ey to cons nt o grant the prayer of the petition if they are not convinced by the evidence and that the interests of the public and of their constituents will be promoted by it? Are they to give their sanctions to what is wrong because they represent the town of Danvers? Can any petition to the court discharge any one of its members from his obligation to act impartially in his office? No member of the court is allowed to act as counsel for any party before a committee of the Legislature lest it should disqualify him to act impartially. The N. D. R. says he was "instructed" and that "none of us doubted that he would sacrifice his own opinion to the opinion of his constituents!" That is he would obey instructions even if by so doing he went against what he believed to be for the bests interests of the public and his constituents. This would make him a mere machine divested of the most essential attributes of an independent thinking man. I deny his right as a Representative to submit to such degrading dictation. If he has instructions—which he cannot approve he ought to resign his office, or exercise his own opinion.—This is the only way that we can have the benefit of the deliberate judgement of our public functionaries. The gentleman says, "the Petitions were written for the special purpose of operating upon the minds of the Legislature." True. And how did they operate upon his mind? They did not prevent him from being in favor of the branch nor from being convinced that it was the best thing for the Town. And yet he says they were to act for the interests of the town and they were to find out what those interests were by the petitions!" If so, what business have they to spend their time and the money of the state in hearing remonstrants and other witnesses and pleas from lawyers! it is nothing but a farce. They shonld only look at the Petitions and proceed at once to grant them. I wonder if any body has seen that "nicely tempered axe," that the gentleman got "into his hands! he had better look out for his own fingers. He says "he wishes me now to understand that he WAS ONCE favorably disposed towards a branch from the E. R. Road!" INDEED! well it seems to me I did once "understand" this, and the charming way he had of showing his favorable disposition! Does he dare wish us now to understand whether he is now favorably disposed to a Branch from the E. R. Road? He must not be afraid, I will promise not to make a very "long article for your paper!"

The N. D. R. denies the Truth of the statement made to me by one of the committee and which I have twice published. I called on my author to see if he would confirm the statement, he said he would as it was true proposed that we should immediately see the N. D. R. which we did—he still persisted in his denial and said he had never had any conversation with the gentleman about the R. R. business since the Court rose. My author says he is not mistaken as he has the most perfect recollection about the conversation and of the impressions that it made on his mind.

The N. D. R. admitted that my story was fully confirmed by that of the other gentleman. Under these circumstances I would gladly avoid any comments upon the question of the veracity of the two gentlemen as I believe they have both stood well as men of truth, but the connection it has with this controversy requires that I should notice it. Look at the relative position of the gentlemen, my author could have had no conceivable motive whatever to have misstated the case—he did not know of any controversy between the N. D. R. and myself at the time he told me of it, he thought the N. D. R. was honest in assigning the reasons which he did and was almost satisfied with them himself. But the N. D. R. is very differently situated, he has been striving to defend himself by "Instructions" from the town and says, he was governed by them and nothing else—he has labored intensely to arm himself with instructions and placed his whole dependence upon them. If this story is now admitted as truth it cuts him off entirely from his plea of "instructions" they are nothing but a dead weight upon him, and this story comes in to confirm the justice of my "dish of inferences," he has certainly a very strong motive to get rid of this disagreeable story. Why did he not deny it when I first stated it, by omitting to do so he gave me and the public good ground to believe it true, how hard it was to get him to notice it. He saw clearly that there was no other way of escape but the desperate one of turning round and denying the whole story.

I have below annexed the statement of Mr Joshua Silvester which I think is well calculated to shed light on this subject it shows that the opposition of the South Parish was a subject of anxiety with him before he acted and that no instructions weighed upon his mind then. I have other strong circumstances in confirmation but I know you have not room for them.

Perhaps I owe an apology for not noticing the many personal allusions by which the N. D. R. has labored so hard to enrich his communications I supposed he was aiming to establish the dignity of his character as our Representative! In relation to the conversation at "Wildes,'" the N. D. R. says that "He" (meaning me) "then knew conclusively that although I had been in favor of a branch that I should act for what I believed to be for the interests of the town and oppose it! This is a great mistake. I then learned, "that although he was in favor of a Branch that he would act for what he believed would be" against the interests of the town and oppose!

MR SILVESTER'S STATEMENT.

In answer to questions proposed by E. Putnam Esq., I submit the following statements. Previous to the final action of the Legislature last Spring upon our Railroad petitions, I had several conversations with Mr. Henry Fowler upon the subject, he expressed the opinion freely that it would be for the interest of the town of Danvers, to let the E. R. R. Co. build a Branch, and it was the only way we should ever get a R. R. to N. Danvers. He never said one word about being instruted by the town to oppose the E. R. R. Branch, but expressed much anxiety about what course to pursue in the matter, and manifested great fear in relation to the opposition of the people of the South Parish to the E. R. R. Branch, and sent word by me to E. Putnam Esq., to be sure and call the committee together the next day to get an expression from them, that he might know what to do.

FOR THE COURIER.

DANVERS INDEPENDENT RAILROAD No 4.

Mr. Editor—In 1836 when the Eastern Railroad Corporation obtained their charter, the people of Danvers as well persuaded as at the present time, that the route prayed for would afford them if any, but very limited accommodations, earnestly remonstrated against it and did all in their power both by their representatives and otherwise to prevent its adoption. And now, therefore, after witnessing its operation for nine years, and availing themselves as much as possible of its facilities, and after finding the whole community adopting the views entertained by them at the time, viz:—that a great error was committed in planting this road along the sea coast, and terminating it in a ferry, they certainly came forward with a better grace to ask for an independent railroad, than they could have done had they acquiesced in its original location.

And further, it is apparent to every body at this day, that had the route prayed for by the citizens of Danvers in 1836, in their petition headed by Thomas H. Perkins, succeeded—no other railroad would have been wanted. There is no respect in which Salem would not have been as well accommodated; Danvers would have been satisfied, and under its influence would at this time have had an augmented business and population; the Salem tunnel and its $100,000 would have been saved; the marshes, the natural play grounds of storms and tempests, would have been unmolested, and a large proportion of the enormous outlay in crossing this exposed, dreary and uninhabitable waste, would never have been added to the cost of the road; and though last, not least, that curse of all railroads, the ferry—would have been left to its legitimate and rightful occupants, viz:—the navy of the country, and the commerce of Boston.

How happens it, then, Mr. Editor, since these are all existing, permanent and enduring objections, which cannot well be magnified by any coloring in the power of language, that the railroad of 1836 should have avoided the natural route asked by Thomas H. Perkins and others, leading directly into the city between the two great thoroughfares from the county of Essex to Boston, to wit:—the Salem turnpike, and the old road—and thus affording ample accommodations to all on the right hand and on the left:—and instead thereof, elected to come in at a vast additional expense, over miles of sunken marshes where never during the existence of the Atlantic coast, a single passenger or a pound of freight can be obtained?

The solution of this query is well known to all who have any knowledge of the history of this project. The year 1836 was embraced in that period of insane speculation which pervaded many portions of our country including the far west and the remote east; in which many wealthy, respectable, and until then, prudent citizens, made shipwreck of fortunes the accumulation of which had cost them lives of industrious application to business. Among the visionary schemes of the day, was that of East Boston. The island had been purchased, a joint stock company created, and a more magnificent air castle perhaps, has not been produced by the imagination of man, since the far famed and fatal South Sea Scheme which flourished in England 125 years ago when the fever of speculation so infatuated and bewildered the whole people, that in the brief space of three months, the vast stock of that celebrated company rose 800 per cent, when the bubble exploded spreading unparalleled distress throughout the British empire. So in humble imitation at East Boston; the great timber company had received its act of incorporation—the "Eastern Avenue" connecting the island with the Essex turnpike, had been opened with imposing grandeur—the stately "Maverick House" reared its gigantic proportions, and for the princely splendor of its furniture, and the capaciousness of its accommodations, became an object of curiosity far and wide. Individuals were not wanting—men of intelligence and sound judgement on all ordinary subjects, who persuaded themselves and endeavored to persuade others, that ere many years should elapse, the business and population of East Boston would rival those of the city proper. About this time, the subject of a Railroad from Boston, East, began to be agitated.

This was seized upon by these enthusiastic speculators, as the great boon, alone necessary to ensure the realization of their most ardent anticipations. The principal managers in this wild enterprise, were at its outset, men of great wealth and extensive influence; both of which immediately united in the accomplishment of this, the great desideratum to final triumph.

Such was the state of things, when this subject was presented for the action of the General Court; and as must be apparent, no persons were to be found, whose inducements to oppose this Railroad prompted them with any degree of zeal at all comparable with the indefatigable ardour, with which its friends pressed it; leaving no stone unturned and sparing no expense, until the object was accomplished, and the charter obtained.

Thus in spite of the many, and serious objections which existed to this route, was it forced through. And how has it mocked the imaginary anticipations of its projectors. It remains done as it were proclaiming the great error, and extreme folly of those whose agency determined its location, and who have thus rendered in a great degree valueless a large part of their island, by the very cuttings and crossings of its iron bands.

But the great bubble which planted it there, has long since burst. The stock has found its proper load. The Maverick House—as little wanted as the Railroad, but being easier of removal, has been demolished, and is gone. And Boston itself contrary to the predictions of diseased imaginations, remains on the other side of the water.—While the railroad, as yet, ordained as it was by the will of its patrons, and the language of its charter to become part and parcel of the very soil—tarries awhile longer, to punish the indiscretion and short-sightedness of those who thus misplaced it. But when the measure of this punishment shall be full, the island will be relieved of its presence, and those who shouted loudest at its introduction, will most joyfully hail its departure.

This is no fiction: we have personal acquaintance with those who devoted days, if not weeks at the State House, in procuring its establishment, who now openly denounce it as a nuisance, so far as it effects their interest at the island.

We have thus alluded to the origin of the Eastern Railroad, and now in connection with this matter submit the following position. A Railroad charter having thus been obtained from the city of Boston through the county of Essex, and its location determined without respect either to the greatest accommodation of the greatest number, or to cost of construction, but solely in subserviency to the imaginary interest of an existing private corporation—and having been so located, that while the cost is quite double, the number actually accommodated is far less than would have been the case had the natural and more eligible route through Danvers been selected—thus giving easy accommodation to the thousands, inhabitants of this latter town and its vicinity—should these thousands be forever compelled to forego the advantages of the more direct, the natural and cheap route? Is this true republican doctrine? Are the evils resulting from a gross and acknowleged error, to be thus perpetuated?

In a word, should a great body of sinless, unoffending citizens, so far as this transgression is concerned, and who opposed it with all their energy from its commencement, be forever compelled to support a road and pay an interest of 8 or 10 per cent on the enormous outlay of $900,000, which but very poorly accommodates them, while a road affording them the most direct and ample accommodations, can be constructed at a cost not exceeding $300,000? Are the rights of the people to be thus sacrificed to hush the clamor set up by an existing corporation? Let the ballot box answer the question. T.

MISCELLANY

We have been permitted to see the following letter from a gentleman of this town, now abroad, and deeming it of much interest on account of the information it communicates in relation to a neighboring Province of which but little is known here, we have taken the responsibility of giving it to the public. It will be seen that it is written in an easy familiar style without the most distant idea of publication, but which gives it an interest that more prepared productions would not possess. If the writer should complain of our presumption, we can only say as did Paul Pry, that "we will never do another good natured thing in our lives."

Steamer Cambria, Oct. 17, 1845.

Here we are rolling along through the ocean at the rate of 10 knots per hour, 12 miles from Cape Sable and about 125 miles from Halifax, with 85 passengers and a cargo consisting of 400 bales Manilla hemp, 100 barrels of apples, some bales of merchandize, (return cargo) 3 large turtles, 3 small pigs, 2 rattle snakes, 2 grey squirrels, 1 cow, 1 moose deer, 1 hawk and about 20 birds of different kinds. The moose deer is owned by Capt. Judkins, which he carries out as a present to one of his friends in England. It attracts much attention on account of its singular formation and extreme docility, and is quite a pet among the passengers. I admire this rolling about on the ocean, in a steam ship, out of sight of land—It seems like a little world by ourselves. I have not been sea-sick, and think I should not be were I to cross the Atlantic. I almost regret that I am not going to England. I should enjoy the voyage very much.

It really seemed like getting home when I went on board the Cambria. I am acquainted with the officers, all of whom are exceedingly kind to me. The Cambria is a noble steamer, stiff and strong and a first rate sailor. She is commanded by Capt. Judkins, a very kind and gentlemanly man and an efficient officer, who spares no pains to make all under his charge comfortable and happy. We are having a very smooth, delightful passage, and quite a social time. We left Boston at 2 o'clock P. M. yesterday, and shall probably arrive at Halifax in about forty hours after leaving Boston. Gov. S. T. Armstrong and Lady are passengers. Gov. Armstrong is in delicate health and goes to Italy for the purpose of improving it. Captains Mugford and Marshall of Salem are also passengers—the former is going to Manilla and Canton, and the latter to Genoa. Mrs. Fanny Butler (formerly Kemble) is also with us, with her female attendant. She has separated from her husband whom she married a few years since, on account it is said, of his barbarous treatment toward her. She now returns to her native land, bowed down with grief, leaving behind her two children whom her unfeeling husband will not permit to accompany her. She looks careworn and sorrowful, but receives a great degree of sympathy and attention from the passengers. There are some very accomplished Ladies and Gentlemen among the passengers. The Steamer goes along smoothly, and the time passes away very pleasantly.

October 18.

Here I am in Halifax, among blue noses, black eyes, red coats, and riflemen. The Cambria arrived here at 4 o'clock this morning, in 38 hours from Boston, and left for Liverpool at 1-2 past 9, having been detained several hours for despatches from Admiral Sir F. W. Austin. The morning is uncommonly pleasant for the season. The Cambria made a most splendid appearance as she passed out of the harbor. A great number of people were present on the wharves to witness her departure. She fired a salute as she left and was cheered by the multitude. I have taken lodgings for a few days at a public house called Mason's Hall, the corner stone of which was laid forty years ago by the Duke of Kent, the father of Queen Victoria.

Halifax is quite a city. It is upon a point of land which makes out into the ocean. There is a large basin which runs up by it 12 miles on the one side, and another running up 4 miles on the other. It has a most excellent harbor. It is built upon the side of a hill, and resembles New Bedford very much as you approach it by water. There are most extensive fortifications building on Citadel Hill which overlooks the whole harbor and basins. The fortifications were commenced eight years ago, and it is said, will require four years to complete them. Halifax was settled in 1749 by Lord Cornwallis, who landed on the 5th of June in that year, with 300 settlers. It was incorporated into a city in 1841. Andrew Mc Kinley is the present mayor. Lord Falkland is the Lieut. Governor, who has a council of nine to advise with him Sir Jeremiah Dickson is Commander of the forces. The Hon. James W. Johnson is Attorney General. The House of Assembly consists of 51 members, and the Legislative Council of 18. Sir Enoch Collins is the most wealthy Gentleman in the city—supposed to be worth about $2,000,000. The Provincial Building, much the largest in the city, built of freestone, is a magnificent edifice, but not up to our public buildings in Boston. There are in the city, 12 Churches, 3 Banks, 3 Public Houses, several private Boarding Houses, a Custom House, a large granite Penetentiary just completed, and some splendid, pleasant Mansion Houses. The buildings generally are of wood, and most of them old looking. Three years since when the census was taken, the population was 19,000—it is now about 22,000 and is increasing rapidly. There are about 2250 troops stationed here—two Battallions called the Rifle Brigade, numbering 12,000, and a Regiment of Infantry called the "Bloody 43d," numbering 800—and three companies of Artillery of about 250. I have seen them marching through the streets, manœuvreing at the sound of the bugle, and have visited their barracks. They are fine looking soldiers and appear to be under excellent discipline. There is of course, some show of the Aristocracy here, but the citizens generally, are very kind and courteous, hospitable to strangers, appear to be satisfied with their Government and happy in their various avocations and conditions in life.—But as yet, I am not very much in love with their Government, the people, or the place. I have visited the Public Houses, the Public Buildings, Custom House, Forts, the Burying-ground where Lawrence and Ludlow were buried, and at last found myself at the Penetentiary about 2 1-2 miles out of the city, where they concluded not to detain me but graciously condescended to let me proceed on my journey.—I shall leave the city on Tuesday morning next for Pictou, and shall have to ride about 120 miles in stages. After staying a few days there, I shall leave in a steamer for Prince Edward Island, from which place it is possible you may hear from me again.

In haste. Yours truly.

The following noble sentiments are extracted from a late number of the True American.

Were we, in any sense of the word instruments of discord in Kentucky—did we produce excitement merely—were we simply agitators—not a line would we pen—not a word would we utter even on the great theme of human freedom. Was our object a political one—nay, did we believe that years hence in a quieter period, and under happier auspices, all that we wanted, would be accomplished by other hands—our voice would be silent as the grave. We love not this stormy work. We have no temper for hate, and the indulgence of lawlessness—or for excess and the wild heavings up of society. We would do kindness in the spirit of kindness, and through love and in the spirit of love, under the law, work out our reform. But when the consitution is set aside—when that worst of all tyrannies is resorted to, of using the forms of law to oppress one human being entitled under law to his full liberties—when an irresponsible power asserts that there shall be no freedom of speech or of the press—we cannot—WE DARE NOT—stop to consider consequences to ourselves personally, or to muffle our tongue when wrongs so monstrous stalk abroad over the land.—No! No! Pained though we be, we must stand where duty points out our path, and forgetting all else, remember only the honor, the fame, and the permanent welfare of Kentucky.

We extract the following from an excellent article in the Newburyport Herald upon the subject of the Railway mania.

There is not half the encouragement for the construction of railroads in England that we have in this country. The bulk of merchandize to be transported there is not so great, and though there is a more dense population, yet the mass of the people are not so able nor so accustomed to travel as our population and more important than all there is not the room to grow that we have, with an immense and populous empire in prospect, pouring within even the present generation increasing millions out upon all the lines of transportation.

The railway can have no competition to transportation except in navigable waters, and even with those it holds a divided empire, being preferred for all the lighter and more valuable descriptions of merchandise as well as for passengers generally. With our growing country, then, they can hardly fail, any of them, of ultimate success, and it is good policy at all important points to secure them while the land damages are low, and before the country through which they pass has become too densely peopled. Experience has shown that the roads thus constructed have been already the most profitable, and as the population increases around they will hereafter realize a much greater income. Some roads which it was predicted would turn out failures, owing to the spare population near them, have proved the most successful, owing to the cheapness of their construction, while others through a densely populous vicinity, have been unproductive and disappointed the projectors, owing to the great cost of construction caused by damages and expensive depots.

The Putnam Free School. This building is nearly completed on the outside, and makes a very handsome appearance, though it would have made a better show, standing back 30 feet farther from High street. We are glad to learn that a movement is making to provide means for a stone Portico instead of a wooden one, for this really fine edifice. The funds in the hands of the Trustees are insufficient, so that $1000 additional is required for a freestone Portico. One gentleman has offered $100 towards this sum, and we hope that others may be like minded with him. The cost of the entire building we have heard it stated will be something rising $20,000, —N. P. Herald.

OLD MASSACHUSETTS—SHALL SHE BE SAVED?

Yes, Fellow Citizens, that is the question which the setting sun of next Monday will determine—whether Massachusetts, the home of the Pilgrims, the birthplace of the Revolution, the pride of the Union, is to trail her glorious banner in the dust, and given over to designing men and corrupt measures, lose her peace, prosperity and honor, and become fallen and degraded—or whether the sound principles and pure patriotism which have thus far made her free, enlightened and happy, which have guarded her religion and laws, educated her people, enriched her merchants, prospered her mechanics and yeomen, and given comfort and contentment to all, are still to be her bulwark and defence, and perpetuate her blessings to after times!

Fellow Citizens, the struggle is not one of mere party pride. It is the old warfare between Conservatism and Radicalism—between the wisdom and safety of experience and years, and the folly and danger of innovation and experiment—between the eternal principles of our Fathers who sealed their faith with their blood, and the fatal dogmas of unscrupulous demagogues who would hazard all that is most sacred and dear to secure the spoils of office and the emoluments of power. There is no time now for argument—it is the hour for action. But the history of the past and the signs of the present alike prove that we cannot long preserve the institutions which guard our rights, protect our property and secure our happiness, unless we breast manfully the turbulent wave which is rushing on, threatening to sweep away all the ancient bulwarks of our safety.

Whigs! We call you once more to the rescue! By your professions of other years, by the faith that is now in your hearts, by your devotion to those principles you have ever labored to establish, by your regard for your own interests and the legacy you would leave your children, by your sense of duty and your love of truth, by all that should move an honest man and a faithful citizen, rally again around your flag, and under its waving folds strike once more for the honor and welfare of our ancient and beloved Commonwealth. Old Massachusetts, God bless her! what a dear, good Mother, what a glorious old State she is! In darkness and storm and when all else has bowed to the fury of the tempest, she has stood up proud and erect, cherishing her children with unceasing devotion and preserving unsullied the integrity of her name. And now, this kind mother, this our native State, WAY, HER VERY LIFE IS IN DANGER.—Whig sons of the Old Bay State, where are you?—Now is the time to show your gratitude and love. Arouse from your lethargy, Awake to your duty. Forego every secondary object. Forget all that distracts and divides you. Look to the one great issue. Harmonize in feeling, unite in action, and strive heart and soul to save from destruction the Commonwealth which was planted by your sires, which protects and blesses you, and in whose salvation can rest the only hope of your descendants.

WHIGS, ARE YOU READY?

The time is short, very short, before the Election, and every moment of it should be employed.—The Election will be one of the most important in its results that we have ever known in this State. The great Whig cause is endangered by the multiplicity of new parties which have sprung up, and it is now emphatically a time for the true and the unwavering to rouse themselves for the contest.

Young men—The contest is particularly for you. The result of the Election depends in a great measure upon the efforts and spirit which you manifest. If you are determined that you will devote one day to oppose the threatened overthrow of the policy you love, and which is promotive of your success in life, there is little fear for the result. Not only do it, but do it with a will! Do it with enthusiasm. Rouse your companions and friends to the Polls, and let it be shown what the young Whigs of Danvers can do, when dangers threaten!

Be at the Polls early, and if you think of any good Whigs who are absent, send for them—spare no pains to get out every Whig voter!

One vote may be of the greatest importance!—Repeatedly, important offices have been filled by the influence of one vote. Let no one feel that there are enough without him.

Bring your neighbors with you. The place in which the Election is to be held, is distant from the larger portion of the town, and necessarily it will be inconvenient for some, who have not conveyances, to attend. Let those who have conveyances, provide for such persons. Let every carriage go, well loaded with good Whigs.

Let nothing prevent your being at the Polls.—Don't mind the inclemency of the weather, or the pressure of business. Be ready to go to the Polls in all and every event. Remember that a full vote is always a strong Whig vote.

See to it that BRIGGS & REED—the personifications of Whig principles, the ardent supporters of protection to your industry, the friends of all internal improvements, the advocates of human freedom, and the supporters of the psesent noble policy of the Old Bay State—are well supported. Spare no efforts. Whigs, be at your posts, and in season.

KEEP YOUR TEMPER.

At this time of political and we regret to say of local and sectional excitement we hope our friends from the different parts of the town will keep cool. Avoid meeting in groups for the discussion of the merits or demerits of candidates as a great deal is often said which had better not have been said and the hearers get excited without being convinced. Again we say keep cool. Distribute your tickets without noise, vote understandingly and quietly and return to your homes, whatever may be the result good natured and with undamaged tempers.

FIRE. On Sunday morning, about half past three o'clock, fire was discovered by the Engineer, in one of the buildings connected with the extensive Tannery establishment of the Messrs Southwick in this town. At first it was feared that the conflagration would be very disastrous, but from the prompt and well directed efforts of the Danvers and Salem Fire Departments, combined with an abundant supply of water, and a fortunate absence of wind, the damage sustained was small, in proportion to the property endangered. The fire was occasioned by friction in some part of the steam machinery. The engine, we understand, was taken to pieces and removed. The upper stories of the buildings, or a large building with wings, were consumed, but the stock, with the exception of that in the drying loft was not injured. The loss on stock, buildings and machinery is probably from $6000 to $8000, which was fully covered by insurance at Worcester.

A CARD.

The undersigned return their sincere thanks to the Officers and Members of the Salem and Danvers Fire Departments, for their efficient and untiring exertions, by which a large amount of property was saved from destruction by the Fire which occurred at Danvers, on the morning of the 2d inst. Also to the citizens generally, for their active and voluntary efforts in protecting and securing said property. Too much praise cannot be awarded to the Chief Engineers, for the prompt and decisive manner in which they discharged their duties on this occasion

P. R. SOUTHWICK,
A. H. SOURHWICK.

A CARD

The members of the Volunteer Engine Company, No. 8 render their thanks to the Firewards, for the good collation that they got for them at Union Hall, on the 2d inst., after working at the fire at P. R. Southwick's Tannery, but by the neglect of the first Director, we did not partake of it, yet we will remember them for their kindness.

Also, those friends that brought refreshment to the Co. while at work.

Danvers Nov 6th, 1845.

A CARD

The members of the Volunteer Engine Company No. 8, render their thanks to the Company No. 3, of Marblehead, for the collation that they received at their room, on the evening of the 31st Oct. 1845.

M. TELYEA, Clerk.

THE LATE ALARMS OF FIRE.

We have before remarked on the evils of raising false alarms of fire and recommended efficient means for the detection and punishment of the offenders. There have been several alarms lately caused by drunken rowdies shouting as they rode through the streets, the sounds being mistaken for the cry of fire and spread rapidly over the town. If these fellows cannot be made to suffer for thus disturbing the peace of our citizens, we hope care will be taken to prevent the wide extension of such alarms by timely efforts to know when a fire really exists and if it does not, to prevent all further outcries or ringing of bells. The act of continuing an alarm when it is known to be false should be punishable as well as raising the alarm at first.

Danvers Post Office. The interior arrangement of the Post Office in this part of the town has been essentially altered and improved, and additions made to the number of boxes. It is now a very commodious and convenient place, and under the auspices of the new incumbent Mr. Sylvanus Dodge, who performs the duties of his office promptly and efficiently, we have no doubt the citizens will be fully satisfied.

The gross receipts of the Office for October, we understand, were about $106. There were 1076 letters received, paying 5 cents each and 168 paying 10 cts.

LYCEUM.

We learn that the Lectures at the Institute, will commence in a few weeks and that it is the intention of the Managers to procure such Lecturers as will ensure a course unsurpassed in any previous season. Seasonable notice will be given of the commencement of the course, and where tickets may be procured.

The wind-mill of the Messrs Roundy in Marblehead was entirely destroyed by fire on Friday night last. The stock and building was insured for $2000.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT. The Jurors from this town are Jonathan King and Franklin Osborne.

ANOTHER PATRIOT OF THE REVOLUTION GONE!

GEN. GIDEON FOSTER IS NO MORE!

This venerable relic of the revolutionary struggle who has been so long almost the only connecting link between this and the proceeding age has just been called to sleep with his fathers. He has of late enjoyed his usual share of health and until the early part of last week nothing was seen by his friends to forbid the hope that he might yet see a century of years On Tuesday of last week he took cold from exposure which resulted in an attack of disease which at his great age was too powerful too be thrown off and retaining his faculties to the close of his life. He died Saturday morning at 1 o'clock, having lived to the age of 96 years and 8 months.

The news of Gen. Foster's death came upon our citizens when they were wholly unprepared to expect and spread a gloom over the whole town. A spontaneous meeting of the people was held to consider the proper means of testifying the public respect to his memory, and a Committee appointed to consult the friends of the deceased and make arrangements for the funeral. The following were the proceedings of the meeting.

At a voluntary meeting of the citizens of Danvers, held at the Town Rooms, on that day, to see what arrangements should be made in relation to the Funeral of GEN. GIDEON FOSTER,

Dr. ANDREW NICHOLS was chosen Chairman, and FITCH POOLE, Secretary.

It was Voted, That a committee of three be chosen to report Resolutions, expressive of the feelings of the citizens of Danvers on the death of Gen. Foster. Dr. A. Nichols, John W. Proctor, and W. D. Northend were accordingly chosen, who reported the following resolutions,—

Resolved, That we have heard with deep regret, the death of our fellow citizen the venerable Gen. GIDEON FOSTER, in the 97th year of his age, and that we feel it to be a duty due to his distinguished life and virtues publicly to notice this event.

Resolved, That a committee of nine citizens be appointed to make the necessary arrangements for his funeral, at such time as may be agreeable to his family.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and the following persons chosen as the committee, viz:

John W. Proctor, Gen. Wm. Sutton, Robert S. Daniels, Fitch Poole, Elijah W. Upton, Henry Fowler, Daniel P. King, George Osborn, Caleb Lowe.

It was then Voted, That Gen. Sutton be requested to provide a military escort for the procession.

Agreeably to these arrangements, the body was brought to the Unitarian Church on Monday, where the solemn funeral services were performed. After a Voluntary on the Organ, prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Flint of Salem, followed by a Funeral Hymn by the Choir. A Eulogy was then delivered by Hon. Daniel P. King, which was listened to with deep and solemn attention by a very large audience. The Eulogy was an eloquent and just tribute to the character and services of the deceased, accompanied with such considerations and appeals as were well calculated to awaken feelings of patriotism and gratitude in the minds of the people. We hope its author will allow it to be published, with an account of the Funeral Obsequies appended, in further commemoration of the name and deeds of the remarkable individual whose departure called it forth.

After the services at the Church, the body was placed in the hearse, and the Procession formed in the following order:—

ESCORT,
consisting of the Salem Artillery, the Danvers Lt. Infantry, the Salem Lt. Infantry and the Lynn Rifle Corps, the latter bearing a banner presented by the hands of Gen. Foster to the company in 1836. This banner was shrouded in crape. The Escort was a detachment from Gen. Sutton's Brigade and was under the immediate command of Col. Andrews.
Hearse, flanked by a military guard,
Family of the deceased in carriages,
Brig. Gen. Sutton and Staff, and Military Officers in uniform in carriages, Committee of Arrangements,
Officiating and other Clergy,
Civil Officers of the Town,
Danvers Mechanic Institute,
Fire Department,
"Gen Foster" Engine Co. No. 7. in dark dress with badges,
"Volunteer" Engine Co. No. 8. with badges and in Firemen's uniform, Citizens of the neighboring towns
Citizens of Danvers.

The Procession moved with slow and solemn steps and on the arrival at the ground the military formed a line facing the grave. The body was then lowered into the earth, and three volies fired over the remains Agreeably to military usage, the troops formed again in column and marched off at a quick pace, the band playing a quick step. The bells ceased tolling and the flags, which had been hanging at half mast since the time of Gen. Foster's death, were now raised to the peak, and the vast multitude who had assembled notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, departed to their homes.

We copy from the Salem Gazette, the following notice of the deceased patriot, written by one of our townsmen who has had ample and peculiar means of obtaining a knowledge of the subject of it. We hope that the suggestion with which it closes will meet with such a response from the public, that a monument will soon mark the spot, and one that shall be worthy of the man, and of the remarkable events with which in his early life he was so intimately connected. Such a memorial would be no less honorable to the grateful and patriotic feelings of the living, than to the memory of the dead. Let immediate measures be taken to secure its erection.

The name of Gen. Gideon Foster has so long been known and revered in this community, that his death demands a brief notice of his life and character. At the commencement of the revolutionary contest with the mother country, then in the prime of life and the vigor of manhood, he took an active and conspicuous part, in favor of the rights of the people. He was one among those who did so much to distinguish their native town of Danvers, in her patriotic efforts. While Gov. Gage had his headquarters in Danvers, and a regiment of British troops was stationed there, he organized a company of "minute men" to be ready at a moment's warning, and was chosen their commander. On the first alarm being sounded, he was found at the head of his company, and obtaining leave of the commander of the Regiment, he marched with them from Danvers to West Cambridge, sixteen miles in four hours, and engaged with the enemy;—the record of which engagement is unperishably entered upon the annals of his Country. He was afterwards conspicuous as commander of his company at the battle of Bunker Hill. After this he was one of the foremost of the many patriots of Danvers, in all their movements in the cause of liberty. He rose to the rank of Major General of militia in Essex County, and was esteemed a superior officer.

But it is not for his service in the field so much, as for his virtues and example as a good citizen, that his memory is to be cherished. On all occasions, when anything of a public nature was to be done, he was ready to lend his aid. This public spirit and generous ardor were such as at all times to command the confidence of his fellow-citizens. He was a true whig of the stamp of "seventy-six," and so continued through life. For sixty years or more, in succession, he was found constant at the polls at the Annual Election, and among the first to deposit his ballot. He persevered to the end, a brilliant example of genuine patriotism without wavering. His fellow citizens, with one accord voluntarily assembled on the intelligence of his death, and took measures to notice the event with due respect for his memory. We had fondly cherished the hope, that his vigorous constitution, active life and temperate habits, would have permitted his life to be spared to his hundreth year—but it has pleased an all-wise Providence to order otherwise. His remains have been deposited in a conspicuous position in "Harmony Grove," and we doubt not, that a grateful public will take care that the spot shall be suitably marked for the instruction of coming generations.

STATE ELECTIONS.

New York—By the returns already received from this state, it appears that the Whigs have made large gains in several counties. These returns are not sufficient to determine the result in the whole state, but by the following extract from the Albany Argus, (loco) it will be seen that the prospect for the Loco Focos is not very flattering:

The results of the late election are certainly extraordinary, if not in all cases unexpected.

As yet the returns are not sufficiently full to judge with certainty of the aspects throughout the State. In all this region they are sufficiently unpromising.

New Jersey—In some parts of this State, Native Americanism has defeated the Whig ticket, and as a natural consequence loco focos are chosen instead. There is however a Whig majority in the Senate, and a prospect of a majority on joint ballot.

Great Freshet on the Kennebec. By a slip from the Hallowell Cultivator, we learn that one of the most severe rains ever experienced at that place occurred on Wednesday morning, last. The water on the Kennebec rose over ten feet; cellars were submerged, a saw-mill carried away at the Augusta Dam, and fears were entertained for the safety of the Dam. At the last accounts the water had slightly abated.

☞It will be seen by the advertisement of "OAK HALL," in another column, that HALF A MILLION DOLLARS worth of clothing has been sold at this popular establishment during the past year. Now it is evident that there must be strong inducements offered to purchasers, by which they are enabled to dispose of so large an amount. We would advise those of our readers who are in want of any article of gentleman's apparel, to call at No. 32 Ann street, Boston, and see "what has caused this great commotion."

FOR THE COURIER.

At an adjourned meeting of the Whigs of North Danvers, held Nov. 4th, (all the districts but one being fully represented) the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Resolved, that the course of the North Danvers Representative in using his influence to prevent the town from having the privilege of obtaining a branch Railroad from the Eastern Railroad to North Danvers, against his own avowed opinion of what was best calculated to promote the interests of the town, has greatly impaired our confidence in him as an agent to represent our interests in the General Court, and that we ought not to support him for that office.

Resolved, That as Whigs who have always cooperated with our South Parish friends in all measures to promote the harmony and success of the whig cause—we feel ourselves agrieved by their arbitrary and unreasonable conduct in refusing to allow us to have any influence in selecting a candidate for the North part of the town.

Resolved. That we had rather be unrepresented than to be *mis*represented.

W. L. WESTON, Sec.

FOR THE COURIER.

To the Voters of South Danvers

All who are in favor of an Independent Railroad—all who have at heart the true interests and prosperity of the town—all who wish for an increase of business in our village, for an increased value of, and demand for Real Estate—for more constant and certain employment of labor—all who are opposed to exclusive privileges and vested rights—all who desire the same privileges, that have been freely granted to others, and once by the interference of the Directors of the Eastern Railroad, aided by the combined influence of other Roads, refused to the citizens of this town.

Of all such I would inquire have you made up your minds to vote on Monday next? And if you have, do you intend to vote the RAILROAD TICKET? Now is the time for every man to do his duty.—Let every one urge upon his neighbor the importance of a single vote. There are efforts making to defeat one of your candidates for Representatives, for no other reason, than for the faithful and independant discharge of his duty last winter.—He is proscribed because he was not willing to desert your interest at an important moment, and help to favor the views of the managers of the Eastern Railroad. Fellow Citizens, you have the power, if you have the will to re-elect him by a handsome vote. Let every voter be urged to go to the polls—Let all your wagons, and vehicles of every description be on hand, early on Monday.—Let no trifling consideration deter you from doing your whole duty, and then whatever may be the result you will enjoy the proud satisfaction that no blame can attach to you.

FOR THE COURIER.

GOVERNOR BRIGGS.

Whigs of Danvers! On Monday next, you will be called upon to deposit your votes for State Officers. Let no one who claims to be a Whig, neglect so important a duty. The venerable Gen. Foster whose mortal remains have been entombed the present week, set an example worthy the imitation of all good citizens. He never neglected to deposit his vote on any occasion when there was any probability of the least necessity for it. Your candidate for Governor, His Excellency George N. Briggs is entitled to your hearty support. Who can bring aught against him? The tongue of slander cannot reach him. It is at once palsied and silent in any attempt to blast his fair fame. Capable, honest and devoted to the best interests of his fellow citizens, the character of his public acts, and the purity of his private life, give an assurance that the measures of his administration will be marked with wisdom, and only be sanctioned when they are believed to be right and just. No partizan or sinister motive govern him in the discharge of the duties of his responsible station. His manly and benevolent countenance bespeaks the true purposes of his heart. On the subject of Slavery his first message to the Legislature, is explicit and clear.—He there expresses his views in the following manner.

"Soon after the adoption of the Constitution the highest judicial tribunal in the State decided that Slavery did not and could not exist in Massachusetts. Indeed, there is reason to believe that before the existence of our constitution, our highest court held the opinion that the declaration of independence put an end to Slavery in this State. With this fact in relation to Slaves and Slavery in her own history, can it be a matter of surprise to any one, that her people at home and their representatives in the Federal Government, should feel bound, by every consideration of justice and humanity, to oppose the least extension of an institution which they believe to be morally and politically wrong, and to exert every power consistent with their constitutional obligations to the Union, to hasten the time when every human being in this Republic shall enjoy "the inaliennable right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Such, Fellow Citizens, are the opinions of George N. Briggs as expressed in the first State paper he ever put forth to the people of Massachusetts. Is not this taking strong and correct ground, on this deeply interesting subject?—What reasonable man would wish to go further? There may be some who would say we are not bound to regard the Constitution, and cry out in their blind and furious zeal for a dissolution of the Union; but they are not the men to accomplish any great and good work. They may produce anarchy and confusion, but they would not hasten the time when every human being in this Republic shall enjoy the "inalieniable right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Can honest, well meaning abolitionists gain anything towards the consummation of their hopes, by casting a vote against Gov. Briggs, and thereby helping to defeat his election? Let them put this question each to his own conscience, and act according to its dictates.

And why will not men of all parties sustain a man so eminently qualified to be the Chief Magistrate of our beloved Commonwealth. I cannot persuade myself but that he will be re-elected by a decisive majority. If honest and upright intentions—if noble, benevolent and patriotic feelings—if the commendations of the wise and good have any charm for the citizens of the Pilgrim State—it will, it must most assuredly be so.

D.

FOR THE COURIER.

To the Whig Voters of Essex County.

The time for the State Election is close at hand, and as objections to one of the Whig Candidates for the Senate, are entertained by a very large and respectable portion of the Whig Party, they desire to state the grounds of their objections, that they may be understood and appreciated by the whole party.

The objections we have to George Wheatland, are,

First, That he entertains very illiberal views upon the granting of Railroad Charters—that he is in the interest of the Great Railway Corporations, which are determined by the use of every means in their power to retain a monopoly of travel—that if he is returned to the Senate, he will by his opposition to the Chartering of new roads, effect great injury to the Whig party.

Second, That he resorted to low and unfair means to get the nomination at the Convention. Knowing that he had made himself obnoxious to a large portion of his constituents the last winter, and feeling that a majority of the party would oppose his nomination, he went PERSONALLY to the Delegates from all the towns interested, and by professing different views from those which he had previously entertained, persuaded many to vote for him, and thus succeeded in defrauding JONATHAN C. PERKINS, Esq. of the nomination which but for such PERSONAL efforts on the part of Mr. Wheatland, would have been given him.

Third, That he is not a man to be depended upon. That in the inducements he held out to Delagates to support him, he stated, distinctly, that his views were LIBERAL upon the chartering of Railroads, and that he should not oppose the chartering of new Roads in this county, (thus repudiating his views of last winter;) and that since the Convention, without regard to honor or reputation, he has declared to the effect that he shall, if elected, take the stand he took last winter and DEFEND THE OLD CORPORATIONS—and that in his view, no road in this county should be chartered, which will take from the profits of the Eastern Railroad.

These are, very briefly, our objections to Mr. Wheatland. He knew the feeling against him very well, before the Convention, and was determined, aided by the Eastern Railroad Company, to force himself upon the party. Now it is for the Whig party to say whether Mr. Wheatland's nomination shall be supported! Whether the Eastern Railroad Company, with its wealth and profuseness, is to tramel the free Whig spirit of the county.

We propose in the place of Mr, Wheatland, the name of JONATHAN C. PERKINS, Esq., as he was the candidate of the Convention, in opposition to Mr. Wheatland, and wanted but ONE VOTE of an election. Under this state of facts, we look upon Mr. Perkins as the CANDIDATE OF THE PARTY, and call upon all good Whigs in the county to support him.

MANY WHIGS.

A lodge of Odd Fellows, called "Sullivan Lodge No. 12," has been instituted at Claremont N. H.

FOR THE COURIER.

WHIG REPRESENTATIVES.

"United we stand, divided we fall." Shall the true whig town of Danvers, from considerations of local and temporary character, fail to lend her aid in organizing the government of the State? Never was such aid more needed. The new parties that have grown up within the last two years render it exceedingly doubtful whether a whig majority will be returned either in the House or in the Senate; and almost certain that there will be no election of Governor by the people; under this state of things do not suffer yourselves, fellow citizens, to be led away from your duty, by the agitation of any visionary projects, projects which if granted, will never have strength to stand alone.

VOTERS!

Examine the list of voters and see if your name is on it. In preparing it omissions often take place, some by accident and others on account of neglect to pay the requisite tax. Inattention has been the cause of the loss of many a vote. No one can vote unless his name is on the list. Be sure and attend to it yourself, and then you will know that it is done. A VOTER.

Supreme Judical Court. The November Term of the S. J. C. commenced in this city on Tuesday last—present Chief Justice Shaw, and Judges Wilde, Hubbard and Dewey.

The capital case, Com. v. James Powers, has been disposed of without trial, sentence, or hanging, and a nol pros. entered by the counsel for Com'th. Marriage or death seemed to be the alternative, and Powers prudently chose the former—having been joined in matrimony to the girl on whom he was alleged to have committed the offence, at the Salem jail, on Tuesday.—Salem Reg.

FAMILY GROCERIES,

which they will be pleased to dispose of for CASH, at a small advance from cost. Those purchasing of them may rest assured, that every article will be of the best quality and that it can be obtained at as low a price as any store in the city.

In offering our goods for cash, we can present such inducements as will at once convince those purchasing, that they can make a saving of at least five per cent. We think business can be done in this city on the cash system as well as in many others. We shall have butone price for our goods., and those who pay will not be charged a percentage to make up the losses sustained by bad debts, and the additional expense of a book-keeper, &c.

We have also an entire new, carefully selected, and extensive stock of

Crockery, Glass and China Ware

chosen from the newest patterns of recent importation, and purchased at a price which will enable us to sell on the most favorable terms.

In addition to the above, we have constantly on hand an ample supply of the several qualities of which we will dispose of at the very lowest market prices.

WOOD, BARK, HAY, &c

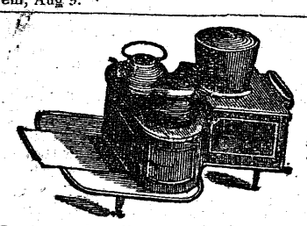
☞We confidently expect that our former customers will give us a call, as we believe they need no assurance to convince them that their wants can be as satisfactorily supplied here, as at any other place in Salem; and at the same time we hope to secure many new patrons, for which end our unsurpassed facilities will be employed to their utmost extent.

☞Goods, as usual, will be sent to any part of the city free of expense.



☞Please bear in mind that our store is at

NO. 13 FRONT STREET.

Nearly opposite the sign of the great Seneca Indian Chief, Corn Plant.

☞As this would seem to be a fitting opportunity, G. C. V. & CO. cheerfully embrace it to return their most sincere thanks to their former numerous patrons and friends, for the generous sympathy extended to them at the time of their calamity by the conflagration, and for the promptness with which their accounts were setted. We would also take this occasion to remind those who are still indebted to us, that money would be peculiarly acceptable at this time, when we are about re-commencing business, and we should be happy to give them a receipt in full.

SHAWLS SHAWLS! Brocha, Canton Plaids, Nett, Kabyle and Woolen Plaid Shawls.

Just opened by M. T. DOLE, oct 25

NEW ENGLAND
TRUSS MANUFACTORY.

THE subscriber continues to manufacture Trusses of every description, at his residence at the old stand, opposite 264, No. 305 Washington street, Boston, entrance in Temple Avenue, up stairs. All individuals can see him alone, at any time, at the above place.

Having had twenty years' experience, he has afforded relief to three thousand persons, for the last five years. All may rest assured of relief who call and try a Truss of his manufacture. He is now confident he can give every individual relief who may call upon him.

The public are cautioned against the many quacks who promise what they cannot perform.

Having worn the different kinds of Trusses, more or less; that have been offered to the public for the last twenty years, from different patent manufactories, and now continues to wear those of his own manufacture, he is now able to decide, after examining the rapture, what sort of Truss is best to adopt to all the cases that occur; and he has on hand as good Trusses, and will furnish any kind of a Truss that can be had elsewhere.

J. F. F. manufactures as many as twenty different kinds of Trusses, among which are all the different kinds similar to those that the late Mr. Jonn Beath, of this city, formerly made, and all others advertised in Boston, together with the patent elastic spring Truss, with the spring pads. Trusses without steel springs—these give relief in all cases of rupture, and a large proportion produce a perfect cure—they can be worn day and night; improved hinge and pivot Truss; umbellical spring Trusses, made in four different ways; Trusses with ball and socket joints, Trusses, for Prolapsus Ani, by wearing which persons troubled with a descent of the rectum can ride on horseback with perfec ease and safety.

Mr. Foster also makes Trusses for Prolapus Uteri, which have answered in cases where possaries have failed. Suspensory Trusses, knee caps, and back board, are always kept on hand. As a matter of convenience and not of speculation, the undesigned will keep on hand the following kinds from other manufactories, which they can have, if his does not suit them; after a fair trial they can exchange for any of them;—Dr, Hull,s Read's spiral Truss; Rundel's do; Salmon's ball and socket; Sherman's patent; French do; Marsh s Improved Truss; Bateman s do, double and single. Stone s Truss; also, Trusses for children of all sizes.

Any kind of Trusses repaired at short notice, and made as good as when new.

Ladies wishing for any of these instruments, will be waited upon by Mrs. Foster, at the above place. Mrs. F. has been engaged in the above business for ten years.

He likewise informs individuals he will not make their complaints known to any one, except when he is permitted to refer to them—it being a misfortune, and young persons do not want their cases known.

The readers of this paper, are respectfully invited to call and examine the variety of Trusses now on hand.

May 31 JAMES FREDERICK FOSTER.

EDWARDS' LINIMENT.

For Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Stiffened or Swelled Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Numbness and Rheumatism.

THIS invaluable artidle is now for the first time offered to the public, after having been in use for twenty years, with unusual and astonishing success within the circle of the proprietor's immediate influence. It has received the unqualified approbation of some eminent Physicians, and also Mariners and Mechanics.

It is also recommended, and more than a thousand cases might be cited, when it has been used for Horses in cases of lameness or when galled, &c. &c.

The public are assured that in offering the above we do recommend that which has not the least semblance of QUACKERY, but on the contrary it has done great and lasting good in its efficacious power and healing qualities.

As this medicine has been so long known in Salem and its vicinity, and as there are many that would avail themselves of it if they knew where it could be obtained, therefore the subsciber would now offer it to the public. It will be found always on hand and prepared by the subscriber.

Salem, April 12, 1845.

To the Honorable County Commissioners for the county of Essex.

THE petition of the undersigned respectfully shows, that the public highway leading from Reading through Lynnfield, by the Hosiery Factory, in Danvers to Salem, is at present in a condition that does not reasonably accommodate the public in the uses required to be made of it. Particularly that part of said way, situate in the westerly part of the Town of Danvers, extending from near the boundary line of Lynnfield to King's corner, a distance of about three miles. Many parts of this way are so narrow, crooked and badly located, as to be incapable of being repaired, until essential alterations are made in the width and position of the same. Wherefore your petitioners ask that the same may be viewed and such alterations ordered as the public convenience demands. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

JAMES MARSH, and alii.

October, 1845.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ESSEX ss. Court of County Commissioners October Term, A. D. 1845.

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, That said petitioners give notice to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at the Lynnfield Hotel in said Lynnfield, on Friday the twenty-first day of November next at ten o'clock, A. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said Petition and of this Order, thereon, in the Danvers Courier, a newspaper printed in Danvers, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said twenty-first day of November—And also by serving each of the Town Clerks of Lynnfield and Danvers with an attested copy of said Petition and this Order, thirty days at least, and by posting up an attested copy thereof in two public places in each of said town, fourteen days, at least, before the said twenty-first day of November, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and take such order in relation to the Prayer of said Petition, as by law they may be authorized to do. E. SHILLABER, Clerk.

A true copy of Petition and Order thereon.

Attest, E. SHILLABER, Clerk.

POETRY.

The following beautiful poem by Mrs. L. J. PEIRSON, from a volume of her poetical productions entitled 'Forest Leaves,' just published in Philadelphia.

CHARITY.

How meekly beautiful she walks
Along the embattled line of life,
Regardless of the pomp and power,
That mingle in the strife.
The glittering toys that strew the way,
Have no attraction in her eyes;
How dim they seem, beside the pearl
That in her bosom lies

She bears no sword amid the fray,
She seeks no laurel, no renown;
What should she do with earthly bay,
Who heirs a heavenly crown?
She seeks not—heeds not—man's applause,
She knows 'tis but a passing wind;
And his revilings, scoffs, and taunts,
Fall harmless on her mind.

Careless of these, she passes on,
With searching eye and heeding ear,
With heart that thrills at every moan,
And pities every tear.
'Tis hers to raise the prostrate form,
To staunch the wound with tender art;
To lay soft leaves of Gilead's balm
Upon the bleeding heart.

To turn the lifted blade away,
And shield the trembler from the blow;
To lead the weary on their way,
And soothe the wanderer's wo.
To aid the bending form of age,
And cheer its path of pain and gloom;
Pointing the dim eye to the day,
That sets not in the tomb.

And see, close, folded to her breast,
The outcast little orphan's form:
She gives it clothing, food and rest,
And shelter from the storm.
Her eyes and heart, are heavenward still,
Her hands are to the needy given,
To bind each wound, to soothe each ill
And lead the weak toward heaven.

What though her eyes are sometimes wet,
When venom'd arrows pierce her breast;
And blood drips from her weary feet
That know no earthly rest!
Still, he whose footsteps she pursues,
Heals all her wounds with holy love,
And dries her tears, with dazzling views
Of her own Home—above.

ORIGINAL TALE.

The Norseman's Revenge.

A TALE OF ANCIENT DAYS.

CHAPTER I.

It is well known to students of geography, that the ocean off the coast of Norway, is noted for a wonderful whirlpool called the Maelstroom, of such dangerous absorbing power, that vessels, together with large fish, incautiously approaching within the reach of its tremendous influence, have been drawn notwithstanding the utmost exertions to escape, down into its horrid gorge, and buried from human sight forever. As near as can be ascertained from the various accounts of those, who have from time to time, obtained a distant view of this wonder of the deep, it appears to consist of a series of circles, one within another, gradually lessening in circumference until, approaching the centre, they form a cone, hollowed in the middle, and similar in all respects to a common tunnel.—Where the outermost circle begins, the surface of the ocean presents nothing very unusual or strange in its appearance; a slight undulation of its bosom, however is perceptible, a faint heaving, like the increase of tide. Within this, several miles intervene before the commencement of the second, which differs in nothing from the first, save that there is a little more swelling and heaving of the waves; but beyond these limits commotion and strife begin. Swiftly revolve the lashed billows, swifter and swifter their whirling, eddying course, louder and louder grows the deafening uproar, while huge masses of feathery foam continually soaring aloft in airy flight, darken the sky, and hide the central terror from mortal sight. Nought is known of this final point of doom and destruction, for no one who has looked upon it with horror-stricken, affrighted gaze, has returned to his fellow men to portray its demon mysteries. Conjecture and fancy, therefore, have full scope, and fill it perhaps, with many a marvel not its own, and yet it seems almost impossible for the wildest imagination to exagerate its probable terrors. Undoubtedly the highest wrought pictures that extravagant fiction can conjure up, fall far short of the dread realities which we are warranted in ascribing to it, when we take into consideration the visible appearances by which it is attended. The lonely mariner of those seas, who, safely removed from the sphere of its power, gazes upon it and trembles while he gazes, beholds only what appears a white cloud resting on the bosom of the deep, and a low, faint hum like the sound of waves breaking upon a distant beach, is the only noise that greets his ear. Such is its aspect in calm weather. But beneath the surface of the treacherous tide, what wondrous works of nature may we not believe exist—huge, ponderous rocks, perhaps, piled one upon another in cliffy battlements, soundless caverns where mighty monsters of the deep disport, where everlasting darkness holds its throne, and the eternal roaring of waters, fit anthem for such temple, fills all space. What mortal mind can conceive the horror and despair of those unfortunate wretches who have found themselves enfolded past all return within its dreadful coils—who can picture their exquisite torments, protracted it may be for hours, first slowly circling around the hateful spot, still returning to the point from whence they started—again and again endeavoring to recede, but in vain! Useless the crowded canvass now, in vain the sweeps are resorted to; still nearer and nearer they are drawn towards the fatal vortex! the vessel no longer obeying the helm, is tossed like a leaf upon the boiling waters, and hastens faster and faster to destruction! the shrieks and groans of anguish, the prayers and supplications for divine assistance, are lost amid the awful roar of the angry billows! I pursue the theme no longer. The above reflections are offered as introductory to a story of ancient days, in which this marvel of the ocean, was made the instrument of merited retribution, by the self-devotion of a hero of those times, one who, for the love of his native land, voluntarily presented the sacrifice of his life to the stern deities in whom he believed, to save his people in a time of threatened peril from their inveterate enemies, the Britons. I vouch not for the authenticity of my tale, coming down as it does, through such a long series of years, but simply premise that it is strictly in harmony with the character of those remote and barbarous ages. The year of grace, 650, had dawned upon the world. The sun of Christianity had also risen, but many a year before, and though not in the full blaze of its glory at the period I am writing of, still its kindling beams had eradicated the aspect, and refined the condition of those climes where it had been proclaimed. But in the distant region of Norway, its dawning resembled the ascension of our earthly orb, when it feebly struggles through cloud and storm and vapor, on its heavenward path. Odin and Thor, with a host of other fabulous deities, the crude creatures of wild and superstitious brains, yet wound their cruel fetters around the darkened minds of the people; all the gloomy attributes of Paganism retained their empire, yet mixed in part with the redeeming traces of a better creed, thanks to the exertions of a few devoted servants of the Cross, who had carried the sacred symbol thither, some years previous. Such the religious aspect, a word on the political condition of the age and country. This was, briefly, a state of incessant, exterminating warfare on the part of the Britons against their neighbors, the Norsemen. At the date of this legend, the latter race were well nigh crushed and broken; driven by their relentless foe from one strong hold to another along the coast, they had fled northward at last with their women and children, and made a final stand at the fort of Morven, an almost impregnable heap, built upon a small island at the mouth of a river that rolled its waters inland many a league, commanding easy access to the interior. To defend and preserve this last position, became, therefore, an object of the utmost importance to the weak remnant, who hastily had made it their refuge, a short time previous to the incident that forms my story. Here they were tolerably safe, for a great natural advantage added to their security. This was the difficulty of navigable approach by an enemy, owing to the intricacy of the channel or rather channels which conducted to the entrance of the river. So complex were their windings, that but few, even of the natives themselves, were sufficiently acquainted with the ingress to bring in one of the cumbrous ships of that period, and to run aground was almost certain destruction, for a strong sea dashed continually over huge masses of flinty rock just beneath the surface of the water at the lowest tide. Thus nothing but the treachery of one of their number, and but few, as I have said, of them could give the foe admittance. In this place then, their strength was concentrated, but owing to the hurry of the retreat, occasioned by sudden alarm, they had omitted to take with them a quantity of provisions and some implements of war left at a smaller fort down the coast, which the Britons had not yet reached. But the results consequent upon this oversight will be unfolded in another chapter.

CHAPTER. II.

The sun had emerged above the horizon shedding its golden rays along the bosom of the deep in broad, bright track, far away till the horizon bounds the view. His cheering beams also rested upon the gloomy, weather stained walls of Morven Castle, lighting up its dark angles and corners, like Hope's welcome smile on the face of dull despair, from bastion to butress, from tower to tower, as the orb of day soared higher, crept his life renewing emanations. They penetrated the narrow slits in the wall, revealing the jaded care-worn faces of an assembly of the Norse chiefs who had met in council to consult together on matters touching the present crisis; stern, iron-clad veterans they were with countenances scarred and disfigured, bearing witness of many a hard encounter. About the apartment were scattered spears and swords, with javelins, bows and arrows, and other instruments of war, in use at the time, at the head of a long rude bench or table around which they sat, presided their chief leader, the valiant count Harold, who, after a short silence, rose and addressed them. "Chiefs and warriors" said he, "We have fled hither, but to starve in security: know ye not that there is scarcely enough provision to sustain us six days? We have left behind that which should have been our first care, and now the lower seas are filled with galleys of the Briton. Our welfare, nevertheless, requires that one of us should return, braving the danger of capture, and speedily bring back the forgotten necessaries."

"I, who have been mostly to blame, am resolved to hazard the perilous adventure, therefore, at eventide, if the gods permit, will I embark upon the voyage." "Not so, by the Anvil of Odin," cried a voice from the lower part of the board, "by the Hammer of Thor, but thou must forego thy purpose, noble Harold; thinkest thou that Hunnebert will remain here in shameful ease while his Chief goes forth to jeopardize his life in our behalf? This may not, must not be, thy presence is demanded here to guide and direct the defence of the fort, when it is assailed, as it soon will be by the Britons; therefore let me depart in thy stead and recover the provision." The person who gave utterance to these remarks, had risen as he spoke, displaying a form and appearance well calculated to strike awe to the soul of the most courageous foe. He was of gigantic, towering stature, on his face were the tokens of former battles; one rough scar in particular, stretched across his forehead circling it as with a band. Though these wounds gave him a formidable aspect, yet no expression of cruelty was in his eyes, but rather a lofty, patriotic enthusiasm, and a dash withal of reckless bravery pervaded his whole manner. His attire consisted of the skins of wild beasts of various sorts, producing from their different colours, stripes and spots, an appearance truly picturesque and motley. For arms, he had a ponderous sword girt to his side, the edge and surface of which bore proof that it had often been in requisition. In passing, it may be proper to observe that his companions were similarly habited with himself, with the exception of Count Harold, who was clad in furs of a finer description, with the addition, also, of gold and silver ornaments, befitting his high rank and consideration. Such was Hunnebert the Sea Chief, now presented to the reader. It may be enquired why he is peculiarly designated as a Sea Chief, I answer, that in those days, as now, warfare was conducted both by sea and land; many soldiers fought entirely in galleys, as their primiture vessels were called, sometimes commanding not one alone, but a whole fleet. It only remains to say that Hunnebert, was one of the bravest and most daring of those who had contended so long, but ineffectually with the more powerful Britons. He had scoured the ocean, continually engaging boldly with the enemy's ships, until at last as has been seen, he with his companions had deemed it advisable to retire to the ancient strong hold of Morven, a long forsaken residence of the Norse chief and sea kings. With the scanty remnant of their fleet, thither they accordingly repaired, a short time before the opening of the tale. From this digression we return to the council. When the brave Hunnebert had ended his short but pithy speech, a murmur of applause ran round the board, while Harold stretched forth his hand and warmly grasped that of the Sea Chief. "I know that thou wer't ever ready and prompt," he said, valiant Hunnebert, for any service where there was chance of meeting danger. When the vulture and raven sweep boldingly in the air, and scream in extacy at the sound of conflict, they exult and scream in ten-fold discordance if they behold thy weapon rising and descending amid the harvest of death, for they know that thou wilt purvey them an ample feast, a rich banquet on the carcasses of the tyrannical Briton. Therefore, get ye gone, brave chief, since such is thy wish, and may Odin the Thunderer be with thee, and infuse double strength to thy arm if thou shouldst meet the foe, which I hope will not occur." "But if thou art taken, Hunnebert," said some of the warriors, "we shall sustain a sad loss, it will be ill, sparing thee from our number now grievously diminished." "Fear me not," replied the Chief, "but at the worst, if captured, their victory shall be hard earned; they shall not carry me to their accursed isle to be made a mockery and show, loaded with fetters and cast into some noisome dungeon, there to pine away, shut out from the free air of Heaven. The sun of Erie the Rover could but ill abide the lot that awaits the captive of the Briton! sooner would he plunge beneath the wave, and gorge with his shrinking flesh, some hungry monster of the deep than endure such fate! After these words, uttered in a tone of high enthusiastic feeling, the conclave broke up, they returning to their several duties, and Hunnebert to prepare for his hazardous voyage. It was on the evening of the same day, that the Sea Chief, with a chosen band of warriors sailed out from the little bay of Morven in a strong and swift speeding galley, steering southward along the coast, and as near in as it was possible, to avoid observation. A favorable wind had risen by good luck, urging the vessel rapidly forward to her place of destination; they continued thus to proceed without meeting an enemy, or anything worthy of note, favored by the darkness for the greater part of the night, until, in short they reached the fort, when they immediately landed and with all needful despatch, seized and bore to their vessel, the stores and weapons which had been left. But although the task was accomplished with the utmost haste, yet the day broke before they were ready to return. This, however, was no cause of apprehension in their peculiar case, for when the sun at last arose, it was not to scatter life and light o'er the face of nature, dark, frowning clouds hid his rays from the world, while occasionally, from out the blackening pall, a dazzling streak of lightening shot forth, accompanied by low muttering thunder, the precursors of a coming tempest. Hunnebert viewed these indications, as rather favorable upon the whole, for his enterprise, so crowding sail, he thanked Odin and Thor, and other patron Gods for the darkness, and bent his course again northward. Meantime the storm which had been gathering burst out in fury so that he was compelled to reduce sail; the thunder grew more heavy and continued, the lightning more intense and vivid while the rain began to fall in torrents.—Still Hunnebert pressed on ploughing the now tumultuous ocean with rapid keel. He had arrived within about ten leagues of Morven, when a stronger galley, directly ahead appeared suddenly out of the mist bearing straight down upon his own ship. the Sea Chiefs saw at a glance that she was a Briton, and at the same instant he was observed by the enemy. So sudden was the meeting that no chance existed of avoiding a conflict, which Hunnebert would gladly have averted, for though ever ready for battle, it behooved him at this time to forego his inclinations. Both vessels slackened speed on discovering each other to escape concussion, and the Chief endeavored by altering his course to run clear of the enemy. But he was thwarted in his plan; the strangers bore up and run alongside of Hunnebert, notwithstanding his efforts to sheer off. The Norseman saw that action was inevitable, so summoning his followers, he stood ready with weapons prepared to resist the attack; none of the courtesies which are used in modern warfare were observed in those days. Thus, as soon as the two galleys met the Briton, who had been thronging to their decks at the tidings of an enemy, instantly precipitated themselves aboard of the Norseman and then began a conflict in which extermination of one or the other party could alone decide the victory.

MISCELLANY

Correspondence of the Danvers Courier.

Halifax, October 22, 1845.

* * * * *

What say you for a bit of rhyme? Well, here it goes:—

'T was when the sun with slow declining ray,
Had passed the splendor of meridian day—
When that bright orb was sinking in the West,
Whose cheering smiles an Autumn's day had blest,
I left my friends, my kindred and my home,
Through foreign lands a few short weeks to roam—
To travel—traffic—manufacture rhymes,
And catch a glimpse of men of other climes—
To see the loyal subjects of a Crown,
In Regimentals—Surplice—or in Gown;
To see those men who posts of honor hold,
Or strut between two epaulets of gold—
To see the Dukes, the Governors and Lords
Decked off with stars, with uniforms and swords—
To see who follow Folly in her train,
Who flirt for pleasure, and who toil for gain;
To see the wise, the simple, and the sad,
Who wear the robes, and who in rags are clad—
In fine, to see whatever may be seen
In these dominions governed by a Queen.

Here I am still in Halifax, having unavoidably been detained two days longer than I expected, when I last wrote you. It has however given me an opportunity to see more of the place and the population, and to make acquaintance with more of the prominent men. I have now seen most of the great men of this Queenly City, and after all they are but men, mere worms of the dust, and though crowns may deck their heads, and gorgeous robes their bodies—though they may sit upon thrones, or in chairs of state and wield despotic power, or roll along amid the finest, richest equipage, and cheered by the multitudes, they are all subject to the great laws of nature, whom Death the great leveller, will ere long sweep away to that bourne from which no traveller returns," be he king, prince, potentate or peasant.

I have spent five days in Halifax, and on the whole have passed my time very pleasantly. I have been very kindly received, and every facility I could desire, has been afforded me. S. Cunard, Esq. (to whom I was introduced some years since at a public dinner given him by the merchants of Boston,) has been very kind to me, and very politely gave me a letter of introduction to his son in law, the Hon. J. H. Peters, the Solicitor General at Prince Edward Island. S. Leonard Shannon, Esq. has also given me a letter to the Hon. R. Hodgson, Attorney General of the Island—and I have letters from other Gentlemen here, to Gentlemen at Prince Edward Island and other places. On account of my looks, form, and peculiar rotundity, I am generally taken by the population, to be a regular built Englishman, and at first was supposed to be a great personage who had arrived in the Hibernia from Liverpool, and attracted some little notice as I passed through the streets. But as the citizens become acquainted with me, they at once discover that I was born among the yankees, and am a yankee all over, for I make no attempt to disguise the fact, for I am really proud of the name. Having attended to the business here entrusted to my care, I shall leave Halifax to-morrow morning, at 5 o'clock in the stage for Pictou, at which place I shall take a steamer for Prince Edward Island, where I shall probably spend two weeks or more.

Yesterday and the day before, it rained incessantly, —to-day is quite pleasant, and I have had an opportunity to see the aristocracy roll along in their splendid barouches. I have also walked around the City again, and like it better than at first. I have again visited Citadel Hill, where the extensive fortifications are building, which I should think covered from 4 to 5 acres of ground, and where there were about 200 men at work. I have also visited what is called the Court End of the City, where the aristocracy reside, and where are some most beautiful and costly mansions, with extensive shrubbery grounds, giving every indication of ease and affluence. I have also visited the Provincial Building, Council Chamber, &c., and taken a last look at the Burying-ground where Lawrence and Ludlow were buried, and whose funeral procession it is said, was much the largest ever seen in Halifax. While looking upon that soil which once contained within its bosom the remains of two of America's most gallant officers, I could not suppress my feelings, and the tears of sympathy ran down my cheeks; and as I paced my steps slowly and solemnly back to my lodgings, I could not help exclaiming, "Dulce est pro patria mori."

I've seen the spot! and marked the holy ground
With tears of sorrow, as I wandered round,
Gazing intently on that verdant mound
'Neath which once lay in Death's dark gloomy grave,
Lawrence and Ludlow! bravest of the brave!
I knew the Patriot Spirits were not there,
But still I lingered—wept and dropped a tear:
I could not add a little to their fame,
But with warm tears embalmed each honored name—
Hallowed forever may their memory be,
Throughout all time, and through eternity!

Yours truly.

The Charm of Woman—Oh! it is by the secret fountain of never changing love—the well of inexhaustible refreshment in the desert—the rose that blooms forever beneath the sunshine of one beloved eye—the voice that rises in a continued strain of melody above the discord of the world—the bird of beauty, whose faithful wing is never folded save in its own sheltered nest—the pure unsullied stream, offering sweetness and melody to every bosom it meets, but reserving the full tide of its sadness for one: it is by such mystical symbols as these that we would describe the natural, the distinctive charm of woman:—not by her perfect form, her ruby lips, her sparkling eyes, or her silver tresses, whether they fall in raven masses on a marble brow or glittering in the sunbeams like threads of weaving gold—[Sarah Stickney.

A farmer lately turned his sheep into a lot occupied by some cherry trees, which had sent up some shoots from the roots; the consequence was that the sheep partook of the leaves of these shoots, and where soon seen staggering about the lot and tumbling upon their heads. Many of them died, when their stomachs were found to contain large quantities of these leaves, which, all know, abound with prussic acid, fatal alike to man and to animals. It should be known too, that the stones and twigs, as well as the leaves of the peach, also contain prussic acid, and are poisonous.

The force of habit was remarkably exemplified recently in Kentucky, on the occasion of a funeral. The bereaved wife and a few neighbors, sat waiting the arrival of the people, all solemnly idle. The widow becoming very uneasy, after sitting idle a few minutes, cried out, "Betty! bring me my knitting, I may as well take a few stitches; while the crowd is gathering."

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV 15, 1845.

MASSACHUSETTS WHIG ALL OVER.

The result of the election on Monday last, proved an overwhelming victory to the Whig party. The Whigs had everything to contend against. As many as three regular parties were organized against them, but they conquered, gloriously conquered all the combined forces of the enemy. The noble principles of the Revolution, which have made Massachusetts what she now is, have been rescued from barbarian hands. The policy which has made the Old Bay State the most prosperous and enlightened in the Union, is saved from change. It was indeed a glorious victory. Worthy the ancient renown of the Commonwealth. Massachusetts, God bless her! a glory to her children at home—their pride when abroad—she stands now where she ever has stood, and ever will stand—the proud fortress of Whig principles—a bright beacon to the Union. She is Whig all over. From the banks of the Merrimac to the rocky hills of Berkshire, the Whig banner waves gloriously in the breeze. It was under all the circumstances unexpected. It shows what the Whig party can do when dangers threaten—that they only need opposition to rouse them to the contest. The result is in brief, in the words of the Salem Register, "that Gov. Briggs falls a few hundred votes short of an election by the people; but the Legislature will be overwhelmingly Whig in both branches, and the Government in all its departments will be thoroughly Whig. Eleven Senators are certainly chosen, all Whigs, and the vacancies will be filled by Whigs. One hundred and seventy-one Whig Representatives are known to be chosen, forty-nine Locos, and three Natives, and it is not unlikely that the Whig majority in joint ballot will be at least ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY! Enough, surely, for all practical purposes! Some additions are yet to be made to the tables, and, probably many vacancies will be filled on the fourth Monday, but the complexion of the Legislature cannot be materially altered." This is glory enough for one day.

The aggregate vote for Governor, in all the towns in the in the state, but ten is as follows:—

Briggs.	Davis.	Shaw.	Sewall.	Scat.
50,946	35,803	7994	7405	1400

It will be seen that Governor Briggs lacks 739 votes of an election. He will of course be chosen by the Legislature, which now stands as follows:—

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Whigs.	Locos.	Natives.
171	49	3

The vote for Representatives in this town, was for Henry Fowler 373; Richard Osborne, 365; Andrew Torr, 181 William Black, 180; George Osborn 119; Thomas Bowen 117; William Walcott 144; Elias Savage 141; Franklin Upton 36; Scattering 26. Necessary for a choice 427.

SENATE.

Eleven Senators are chosen—all Whigs, viz:—Five in Suffolk; two in Hampshire; two in Franklin; two in Barnstable.

The following is the vote for Whig Senators in Essex county:

	Wheatland.	Kimball.	Condry.	Hodges.	Poor.

W. Newbury	104	196	71	116	117
Total,	4241	5316	5396	5473	5392

☞In Lynn, 223 votes were cast for J. C. Perkins, as Senator, and 77 for Henry Gray, of Marblehead.

In Newbury, J. C. Perkins had 111.

In Danvers, 35 votes were for Edmund Kimball, without the Jr., and 360 votes were given for J. C. Perkins.

In Wenham, 47 votes were given for J. C. Perkins, and 4 for Edmund Kimball.

In Topsfield, J. C. Perkins had 76; in Rowley, 50; in Ipswich, 14; in Georgetown, 96; in Salem, 10; in Hamilton. 35—and 13 for Edwin M. Stone. In Amesbury 42 votes were given for J. C. Perkins; In Bradford 60; in Methuen 40.

As the highest vote of any of the opposition tickets falls considerably below the lowest on the Whig ticket, the latter will of course be chosen by the legislative convention.

REPRESENTATIVES.

Amesbury, no choice—voted not to send.

Andover, Wm. Stevens, Henman P. Chandler, Whigs.

Beverly, Albert Thorndike, John I. Baker, Whigs.

Boxford, no return.

Bradford, One Whig.

Danvers, no choice; meeting 4th Monday.

Essex, no choice.

Georgetown, no choice.

Gloucester, Bartholmew Ring, Moses Gilbert, George Perkins; one whig, and two Loco Natives.

Hamilton, no choice.

Haverhill, Daniel F. Fitts, James Hale; Locos.

Ipswich, no choice.

Lynn, no choice,

Lynnfield, no choice.

Manchester, no choice

Methuen, Josiah Dearborn, Whig.

Middleton, Forrest Jefferds, Whig.

Newbury, no choice.

Newburyport, no choice.

Rockport, no choice.

Rowley, D. N. Prime. Whig.

Salem, Jonathan C. Perkins James Kimball Nath'l Silsbee, jr, Caleb Peirce, Aaron Perkins—5 Whigs, 1 vacaney.

Salisbury, Benjamin Sawyer, Whig.

Saugus, no choice.

Topsfield, no choice.

Wenham, no vote for Rep.

West Newbury, Otis Little, Whig.

NEW CITY ON THE MERRIMACK.

This gigantic enterprise, the design of which is, by the united effect of capital and labor to plant a city of 20,000 inhabitants on the north bank of the Merrimack where 6 months ago there was scarcely a board shanty, is now in full progress and gives promise of a speedy accomplishment. At a recent visit to its site we witnessed the operations of the workmen in excavating the great canal which is to convey the water to the factories, and also the great work of building a dam across the river. This latter work is to be effected by enclosing successive portions of the river in coffer dams from which the water is to be pumped that the ledge on the bottom of the river may be levelled and the permanent dam constructed. Considerable progress had been made on one portion of the dam when, by the late rains the rise of the water stopped the operations of the workmen for the season in the bed of the river, but they are now busily employed in constructing guard dams on its banks. The dam is to run diagonally across the river presenting a slightly convex face to the current, the lower end of the dam being near the Andover bridge on the Methuen side. There are now already a thousand hands at work at the river and the stone quarries, and another season we may expect to see water power created for a manufacturing city larger than Lowell. This place has the whole of the waters of the Concord River and other streams added to the power at that city.

When this great undertaking shall be completed, this will probably be the greatest manufacturing region in the world as it is already the greatest in this country. It is a curious fact that here three large streams on which are the whole manufacturing power of Andover and Methuen empty into the Merrimack within a few hundred yards of each other. These are the Shashine and Cochickewick on the south and the Spiggot on the north. If to these tributaries we add the power at Manchester, Lowell and that now to be created at Methuen, and suppose it all to be in full operation throwing off its thousands of yards per minute, we are apt to think there never can be a demand for such quantities of cloth and that the country will soon witness the evils of over production. But when it is known that the vast empire of China with its 300,000,000 of inhabitants is open as a market and that in these goods we can successfully compete with all other nations of the earth we cease to dread those evils and rejoice to find that our skill and industry together with our fortunate position enables us to make the world tributary to our manufacturers.

The people on the Andover side of the river still vent their indignant feelings at the causes which drove all these improvements to Methuen These people had with a spirit of accommodation highly creditable to them, parted with their lands to the Company with the expectation that their own town was to receive the benefit of the undertaking, and they now complain that they are deprived of the advantages they had a right to expect and this too by the act of one of their own townsmen. When will people learn that there are duties as well as rights connected with the possession of property.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

The project for a Railroad to Oregon is not altogether visionary, and we should not be surprised if, in ten years from this time, iron horses should be puffing their way over the praries of the West, and through the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean. That it is a stupendous scheme, cannot be doubted, but the immense, almost incalculable benefit it would confer on this country, furnish a reasonable hope that it will be accomplished. It was first proposed in 1838. Subsequently Mr. Whitney offered to build it, commencing at Lake Michigan and terminating at the Pacific Ocean, and receive as remuneration public domains through which it would pass. He estimated the cost at about sixty millions. But if it is to be undertaken as a national work, a commencement should be made at the head of navigation on the Columbia river, and by the time it is completed to the frontiers of Missouri, (about 1700 miles) private companies will have completed roads to that terminus from the different sections of this country, so that, in reality, is all that is needed to be built by the Government. It would probably, according to the estimate of the New York Sun, cost about thirty millions. Much of the way would be over level praries, which would require but little labor for the construction of roads. The cost certainly is not alarming, particulary when compared with the benefit such a road would confer upon the country. It would bring us near neighbors with Oregon. It would open a direct communication with China and Japan, and give us an immense influence throughout the whole of Asia. It would be, morerover, the best way to possess ourselves of Oregon. For such a communication once opened, emigrants from this country would flock there, and be able to oppose successfully the British power.

It is a road which we have no doubt will sooner or later be built. The expense, though so great, is trifling, when compared with the appropriations made for carrying on a war with a handful of Indians or the expense of supporting our army and navy. It is a work worthy the attention of our wise legislators, and we cannot but be convinced, that the interests of the people would be promoted, if some of our belligerent Representatives would turn their swords into Railroad iron, and thus gain a bloodless victory over the British lion, and win everlasting laurels for their country.

☞The Tribune expresses some hope of seeing the streets in New York frozen over soon, as that is the only state in which they are passable.

LIBRARY OF THE INSTITUTE.

The Library of the Danvers Mechanic Institute has, from a small beginning been increased by annual appropriations and by some donations, to more than 1500 volumes, many among them being of standard value and of high cost. Being thus established on a firm basis and attached to an Institution, disposed to cherish and take care of it, it has been suggested that it may be made a place of deposit for such rare and valuable although neglected pamphlets as may be useful to be referred to by our citizens. We refer to productions of our own towsmen or such as relate to the town, such as Ordinations and Funeral sermons, public addresses &c. to which might be added the productions of our townsmen published in other places and indeed any thing that would be of peculiar interest to an inhabitaut of the town. If these scattered fragments could all be collected and bound together, several volumns might be made which would attract the attention of the curious and be of interest to all.

If any persons have in their possession any of the following pamphlets and printed papers they would confer a favor on the Institute by handing them to the Secretary.

Rev. Dr. Springs Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. Mr. Walker; Rev. Dr. Wadsworth's Eulogy on Washington; Rev. Mr. Walker's Fast Sermon; the Addresses of Dr. Wadsworth, Dr. Nichols, Mr. Proctor, Dr. Abbot, Dr. G. Osgood, and Dr. Hunt, before the Moral Society. Mr. King's Address at laying the corner stone of the monument; A complete series of the Town School Reports which have been printed; A complete file of the Danvers Eagle as far published, or any similar pamphlets and documents which may be in their possession.

High Winds—On Saturday night, the wind which had been light and variable from the southwest, changed suddenly to the northward, and blew with great fury. In Boston, several partly finished buildings were blown down and otherwise damaged.

On the same night, a building which had been recently removed into Tapley village, in this town, was blown over and much injured.

STATE CONVENTION OF TEACHERS.

At the late meeting of the Essex County Teachers' Association, measures were taken to call a general Convention of Teachers throughout the Commonwealth, for the formation of a State Institution of practical teachers whose object shall be, the mutual aid and effort to advance the interests of Education and promote their own improvement. We think this object a highly deserving one and should be encouraged by all friends of popular education, by school committees and teachers. We hope there will be a full and general attendance from all parts of the State. We are quite sure that those in our own County who have witnessed the good efforts of the meetings of the Teachers Association here, by infusing energy and correct modes of teaching and government into our schools will do all they can to extend the same beneficial influence over the entire Commonwealth. The Convention will meet at Brinley Hall, Worcester, on the 24th inst. Teachers will be provided with tickets from Boston over the Railroad at half the usual rate.

GIRARD COLLEGE. This building is nearly finished. It will prove when completed, probably, the most magnificent building in the country. The roof is composed of tiles of uarble, about 40 inches square, and is so nearly flat that you can walk upon it without difficulty. The building is surrounded by a Corinthian colonnade of most exquisite workmanship.—It is situated in the environs of Philadelphia, and from the roof you have a fine view of the City.

ONIONS. It is estimated that about 30,000 barrels of onions have been raised in this town, the past season, being a large increase over any preceding year. At 80 cents per barrel, the price they bring in the market, the gross value of the crop amounts to $24,000. It is enough to make the producers weep tears of joy.

Salt for Quince bushes. We were shown a few days since, a most luxuriant Quince bush, which had been set out two years. A half bushel of salt was put under the roots at the time, mixed with earth, to which it probably owes its superior growth. Salt is generally spoken of by agriculturists as fatal to Quince bushes. This instance shows it to be false, or proves a very strong exception to the general rule.

INCENDIARIES.

On Sunday morning last, a supposed incendiary attempt was made to set fire to the extensive stables attached to Mr Ham's Hotel, and considerable progress was made by the fire, but it appeared to have gone out itself, thus foiling the base intentions of the incendiary. On Monday morning the Board of Selectmen promptly offered a Reward of $500 for the detection of the persons guilty of this attempt, or the one who set fire some time since to the Joscelyn House, near Hooper's Mills. They also offer a suitable reward for the discovery of the orgin of the fire at Mr Money's Barn.—We commend this earnest endeavor of the Board to discover the perpetrators of such crimes against the peace of the community, yet we are not without hope that the fire at Mr. Ham's may yet be found to have been accidental.

An adjournment of the October meeting of the County Commissioners will be held at Newburyport, on Monday, Nov. 17. At the meeting in October, several petitions were presented from various portions of the county for laying out, widening and altering streets, amongst others was one presented by James Marsh and others, for the alteration of the road leading from Reading, through Lynnfield, by the Hosiery factory in Danvers, to Salem.

President Polk was 50 years of age on Sunday, the 2d instant.

RAIL ROADS IN ESSEX COUNTY.

We understand that the project of a Railroad from Newburyport to Andover and Lowell through Georgetown is engaging the attention of the citizens in the north part of the County and strong hopes are entertained of its success. There is another party who prefer the route on the north bank of the river through Salisbury; Amesbury and Haverhill to the new city, that-is-to-be, at Methuen. Should the southern route be adopted and the road built it would be almost certain that the Georgetown and Salem road would also be constructed as it would tap both the great Eastern Roads and pass through the centre of the County to Boston. These improvements would be of great value to the County and particularly to Georgetown as that town is geographically in the centre of the county and would be a convenient place for all meetings, conventions, cattle shows &c.

In connection with this subject, we learn that the Boston and Portland Railroad Co. intend to alter the course of their road between North and South Andover so that the contemplated city will be accommodated with Railroad facilities to Boston.

The Milk of Human Kindness—Amongst others during the week, our Agent called on a wealthy gentleman, of this town, and solicited his subscription, upon which this gentleman, with remarkable sang froid replied, that "his neighbor took the paper, and he could borrow his whenever he wished." Our object in recording this little circumstance is simply to request of our good patron, that should this borrowing neighbor ever wish the loan of his breakfast, he will not refuse him.

Of all actions of a man's life, his marriage does least concern other people; yet of all actions of our life, it is most meddled with by other people.

Salem Register.

The above is a premonitory sympton from the Junior Editor. His bachelorship seems a little uneasy at the thought.

Beecher's Lectures—We have received from the enterprising publishers John P. Jewett & Co. Salem, a book entitled "Lectures to young men" by Henry Ward Beecher. It is a subjeet on which much has been written, but we have never read a work of the kind calculated to effect so much good as this. It is written in a pleasing style, and speaks truths plainly. It warns youth particularly against the seductive influences of the literature of the day, and portrays with the greatest truth the danger from "those authors who soften evil, and show deformity with tints of beauty."

"The polished seducer," he with truth remarks, "is certainly more dangerous than the vulgar debauchee—both in life and in literature."

It is a book which should be in the hands of every young man.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT. A man named David Melvin, was instautly killed on the Worcester Railway by the collision of the engine with a hand-car in which he was sitting.

☞The author of the song called the "Old Arm Chair" has recovered $300 against a man in Baltimore for infringement on the copyright!

Omission—In the account of the funeral of Gen. Foster last week, we inadvertantly omitted to state that the concluding prayer at the church was offered by Rev. Mr. Field, followed by an anthem. The choir was led by Mr. Hubbard. It was the intention of the committee to have had the devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Dr. Bigelow and Rev. Mr. Sewall but both these gentlemen were prevented from attending.

☞Nothing has yet been heard of Tirrel, the supposed murderer of Maria Bickford; it is said that his friends drew money from the Weymouth Bank, for what purpose must be imagined. By some it is supposed that he has made way to the sea.

The Roman Catholic Church has built or consecrated over thirty new churches in the United States within the year.

The Boston Mail of Thursday, gives a very amusing account of an elopment which came off in that city a few days since. The parties concerned were a young gentleman, "who could boast of nothing save poverty" and an orphan—an heiress to a large property. The affair has created much sensation amongst all classes, particularly the "upper ten thousand."

Rev. Mr. Fairchild will be installed as pastor o the new church at South Boston, on the 19th of this month.

☞A collision took place between two express traine of cars on the Eastern Railroad, at Kennebunk, on Monday evening. The up train was taking in wood and water when the down train came in sight, and the engineer of the train reversed his engine and backed his train, which was slowly receding when it was struck with great violence by the down train. The force of the collision was so great that the locomotive of the up train was thrown from the track, and the baggage cars of both trains forced into and completely through the forward passenger cars. Fortunately there were but few passengers, and these escaped with slight injuries. Had the cars been as full as usual of passengers, great less of life must have been the result of the collision. Salem Adv.

We learn from the Boston Traveller, that after an investigation into the cause of the collision, the conductor and engineer of the upward train were found to be in fault, and were accordingly discharged from the service of the road.

RAILWAYS, No. 1.

Mr. Editor—While the subject of a new railway from this vicinity to Boston, is under consideration, it seems desirable to call the attention of all concerned to the latest improvements in the gigantic labor-saving machine. From the best information yet given to the public in several reports of Engineers, &c., since 1841, in England and France, it may fairly, I think, be presumed that the Atmospheric Railway will in a few years supersede the use of all others. And therefore it would be unwise to construct a new railroad now on the old plan. This I think, may be made obvious by a few extracts from a review of all these reports, &c. first published in the British and Foreign Review last year—1844, with a few connecting and explanatory additions perhaps from my own pen.

This subject is peculiarly interesting to the people of this vicinity at this time, inasmuch as it does away one of the strongest arguments urged on our Legislature last Session against parallel roads, viz:—the depreciation thereby of existing property. Sir Robert Peel says, and I presume the greatest stickler for vested rights will not object to the authority, "That the public and the government are not to be precluded from availing themselves of any suggested improvement or invention of science, which may probably affect the present railway property. We are not to be called on to compensate a Company for its choosing a line upon which it may have been found necessary to expend £60,000 per mile. Far from it,—If you can successfully compete—by means of any invention—with such a railway company, you are at perfect liberty to do so. If new discoveries are made applicable to rapid conveyances, the public will avail itself of them. What may be attempted by means of the atmospheric railroad it is difficult to conjecture; but I know that those who have witnessed its exhibition near Dublin, have returned with changed opinions as to its applicability to longer lines than one or two miles."

But what is the Atmospheric railway—what is the comparative cost of construction and working such a way—and what are the advantages it possesses over existing railways? To these questions I shall extract brief answers from the review above named. But to interest the reader as much as possible at the outset, I shall reverse the order of the questions and give the answers to the last first. The first and paramount advantage is the almost perfect safety of this method of travelling even at greater speed than is attainable by locomotives—a train cannot get off the rails. No collision between trains can take place. No smoke or cinders can annoy, or set fire to the dresses of passengers or other combustibles by the way.—It will enable railway companies to lower their rates and thus open means of travelling to larger classes of the community. The Atmospheric railway is practicable on lines of road where the Locomotive system is wholly inapplicable and useless, it greatly increases the speed of travelling and makes it far more certain that the traveller will reach his destination at the expected time.

N.

Mr. Editor—The By-laws of this town contain an article, which is intended to regulate the transportation of gun-powder through the town. It prescribes the route the teams may travel, and states the places where they may stop. One of the principal reasons given for the revision of the By-laws, if I recollect right, was, that an article might be introduced regulating the transportation of gun-powder through the town. For some time after the articles were adopted, the powder teams complied with the regulations and confined themselves to the prescribed routes. Recently they have disregarded the law, entirely, leaving their wagons loaded with powder upon the common; and, as the question of the explosive nature of gun-powder is fully settled, we trust the town authorities will enforce the law, if it should again be violated. The following is an account taken from Allen's Sketches, of the explosion of 30,000 pounds of powder.

"In the city of Leyden, in Holland in 1807, 30,000 pounds of powder exploded. The powder was contained in a canal boat, which was lying in the heart of the city. The houses upon nearly three acres of ground, adjacent to the boat were overthrown by the explosion, and 230 persons perished beneath the ruins.

Mr. Editor—We have heard from South Danvers that it is the intention there to try again to elect Mr. Fowler as a Representative on the 4th Monday but it is hard to credit the report. All must now be convinced that the 16 in the Town Caucus did not mis-represent the views of the Whigs of North Danvers, all doubts if any existed must be dispelled. If another attempt is to be made to force the election of Mr. Fowler the questions to be decided by the voters of Danvers are these: Shall South Danvers have a Senator and two Representatives in favor of their peculiar views and interests, and North Danvers have none to represent theirs?—Shall the opinions and wishes of the people of North Danvers be wholly disregarded by the electors of South Danvers?—Shall that union that has given such strength and energy to the Whigs of Danvers be endangered or destroyed by persisting in such a policy? Can those who profess to be governed by the Golden rule of doing unto others as you would have them do to you, proceed in this manner without doing violence to their own sense of duty? Pause, fellow Whigs of South Danvers, and ask yourselves how you would like to be treated under like circumstances. What have the Whigs of North Danvers done that you should wish to deprive them of the privileges that you would certainly claim for yourselves in a similar case? Presume not too much on the power of your numbers.—Thrice armed is he whose cause is just.

ONE OF THE SIXTEEN.

A new potato digger was recently exhibited in operation at Salem, West Jersey. It threw out upon the ground, with two horses, at the rate of five or six acres per day, and as fast as thirty hands could pick up and carry them away. The soil produced 400 bushel potatoes per acre by the use of compost muck.

☞A churn has been invented in Northampton, Mass., which requires only to be wound up and set in motion, and the butter comes out ready for use, while the good housewife employs herself with knitting or reading a newspaper.

☞ New York Election. The Journal of Commerce gives full returns, from which it appears the Whigs have elected 54 members of the assembly, and the Locos 74. Of the eight senators elected this year 3 are Whigs and 5 Locos. Last year the Assembly stood 46 Whigs, 67 Locos, 15 Natives.

PHONOGRAPHY.

We were present on Thursday evening last, at a lecture delivered by Mr. Andrews of Boston, on this subject, and his clear and interesting exposition of the science satisfied every one who has thought of, or experienced the difficulty of teaching Orthograpy, Reading or Writing according to the present method, that Phonography has great claims to the attention of the community.

Mr. Andrews proved conclusively that much would be saved, both in time which is now spent in learning and in time which is employed in writing our language.

We understand that Mr. Andrews has received an invitation to deliver a lecture on Phonography in the North Parish, and we trust that he will have, as he deserves, a large audience.

Mr. Hinkley, a graduate of the Phonographic Institution at Boston, is now in town and proposes to commence a course of lessons as may be seen by reference to another column.

He is recommended by Mr. Andrews as one who thoroughly understands and is fully competent to teach the art.

We should advise all who can attend, to do so, for it is well worth whatever it may cost, to become masters of the sounds in our language, and Mr. Hinkley has placed his terms so low, as to be within the reach of every one. A TEACHER.

☞An eastern paper states that a man somewhere down on Cape Cod, has drunk ninety-one thousand nine hundred and eighty three glasses of rum in the last 36 years. The cost would amount to near $6,000, and we venture to say he is not worth a "fip," finds fault with hard times, and wonders why he cannot get along in the world.

The Son of a Temperance Father. The Rev. E Beecher, of Boston, in a late temprance speech said,—"I was baptised, as it were, a temperance man.—You all know the temperance principles of my father. When I was a boy, and he put into my hand the little coin I was to spend on holidays, he used to say to me, 'take care that you taste nothing but water.' I need not tell you that I followed his injunction to the letter. There is not a muscle nor bone in my frame that ever felt the power of alcohol. And so long as this arm adheres to my body, and this tongue does not cleave to the top of my mouth, I pledge myself anew to the cause."

DEFY ALL COMPETITION.

A half million dollars worth of Ready Made Clothing and Furnishing Goods to be sold THIS YEAR of our Lord, 1845 "Large Amount," the reader exclams.—True." Some may laugh—others may sneeze—and the remainder may turn the white of their eyes, at what I am going to say, but it is my settled conviction—at conviction, mind you, that I have arrived at by the slowest imaginable degree of cogitation, and due and deliberate calculation—that we live in, and my customers are scattered over every inhabitable part of the globe. The name of

THIS IS A LARGE COUNTRY

"OAK HALL"

has been Proclaimed from, and posted on, the Walls of Canton and echoed back to Europe, and re-echoed All Over every inhabitable part of the globe.

With all the powerful machinery I can bring to bear, I have been able to reduce the price of the necessary article.

Ready Made Clothing,

at so low a price tht I will

DEFY T H WORLD TO UNDERSELL

By doing so IMMENSE a trade I am enabled to keep that in motion. SLOW and SURE is its revolution—clothing in its TURN by thousands, until the end of the year its revolution completes a half million dollars worth sold and brings us in a new career for 1845.

TREMENDOUS WHEEL
